The most beautiful homes in Manhattan, The Hamptons, and Palm Beach have one thing in common. Us.

Ellen Bitton, President

And because we do one thing, and one thing only, we do it very well. In fact, when it comes to securing mortgages, people say we're the best. We'll get you the perfect mortgage. You may only need us once or twice in a lifetime. But when you do, we'll be there. Call us. You'll see. There's a lot more to mortgages than just numbers.

DESIGN ERIKA LAGERBIELKE

UNIQUE WINE GLASSES FOR ALL WINE LOVERS

The same wine can smell and taste quite different, depending on the glass in which it is served. DIFFERENCE is a unique suite of wine glasses where every type of flavor has been given its own glass, designed to enhance the bouquet and bring out the taste. DIFFERENCE glasses add new dimension to the enjoyment of any fine wine. Erika Lagerbielke, one of Sweden's foremost stemware designers worked in collaboration with wine critic and connoisseur Bengt-Göran Kronstam to create DIFFERENCE.

Sag Harbor in the old days

Neon No Show

The Sag Harbor Theatre Sign is Being Restored, or Maybe It Isn't

By Dan Rattiner

The film FIGHTING TOMMY RILEY had its world premiere in three locations simultaneously this past Friday night. They included the Regent Showcase Theatre in Los Angeles, the Cinema Village Theatre and AMC Empire 25 in Manhattan and here in Sag Harbor, the hometown of J. P. Davis, the young man who wrote and starred in this movie, at the Sag Harbor Theatre.

J. P. Davis is the step-son of Gerry Mallow, the owner of the Sag Harbor Theatre, and besides the fact that this Indie film is in International Distribution and was an award winner at several film festivals last year, Davis' premiere as a performer was at the Sag Harbor Theatre, where his dad cleared the stage for a performance by Davis when he was sixteen years old.

And so, last Friday, on the occasion of the premiere, the photographers were there, the red carpet was turned out, and champagne flowed at the party following the movie in the art gallery next door. But missing from the theatre for this occasion — it was there when Davis was sixteen — was the big neon SAG HARBOR sign on the front of the theatre building. You might have heard it had been taken down for repairs and that is true, but it is much more complicated than that. In any case, although Chris Leonard, the sign maker, had promised it would be back up on April 29 in time for the premiere, it wasn't, and hereby hangs a remarkable tale, one that could be the plot for a future movie by J. P. Davis, or anyone else for that matter. It's as small town a story as they come.

About a year ago, Brenda Siemer, the wife of movie actor Roy Scheider, was coming out of her yoga class in a storefront on Main Street across from the theatre, when she noticed a truck out front of the movie theatre with a man on a ladder taking down the word HARBOR. The word SAG was already in the truck.

> The $30,000 was pledged and paid by architect Peter Cook and his wife, Christie Brinkley

As this large sign, neon, red and blue and in a gloriously classic 1940s style, has been the very symbol of downtown Sag Harbor, she walked across the street and asked what was going on. The sign was being taken down, the workman said, at the request of the owner of the theatre, Gerry Mallow, who had ordered it replaced by a new sign made of plastic lettering, which was right there in the back of the truck about to go up.

Ms. Siemer told the man he could not do such a thing, ran off into the stores along the street and rallied merchants and customers to come out to the sidewalk to put a stop to this. She also went into Village Hall, which is within sight of the sign and announced what was going on, and several people from there came out as well.

The sign maker, Chris Leonard, was clearly intimidated by this crowd of hostile people. He now had the HARBOR down too, and had unloaded the plastic letters so he could fit HARBOR in the truck with SAG — both signs would not fit back there — but he said that under the circumstances, he would not put the plastic letters up, but he wouldn't put the old sign up either. Instead, he would drive off with the plastic letters to his shop in Bohemia and return for the old sign, which he said was being junked, later in the day. He invited people to help him unload the old neon sign from the truck and lean it against the building and reload the plastic letters and people did.

"We'll take it off your hands," Siemer said, referring to the old sign. The man didn't know what to say. And he drove off.

Someone now arrived with a flat bed truck and everybody helped put the old neon sign up onto it. It was driven at first to the Whaling Museum for an overnight stay and then the next day to a warehouse owned by Pat Malloy on Long Wharf, sort of secreted away, for safe keeping.

Soon Gerry Mallow got wind of what was go-

Who says that the rich and famous are just like everybody else? Sean Combs of East Hampton was flying in his chartered jet to the DNR conclave at the Four Seasons in Miami last Wednesday when somebody, from up above, hurled a lightning bolt that hit the plane. It wobbled, but did not fall and the pilot made a safe landing at nearby Palm Beach airport. Combs rolled into Miami later in the day in a Rolls Royce Phantom.

The winner of the Kentucky Derby last Saturday was named Giacomo after Sting's nine-year-old son, Giacomo. The movie Jaws premiered in theatres thirty years ago this year. It was based on the book by that name, written by East Hampton resident Peter Benchley, and the events that summer in the book were set in a "Hampton," given a fictional name, but identified about three miles from Amagansett. Both Roy Scheider and Steven Spielberg, who starred in the movie and directed it respectively, live in the Hamptons, and Richard Dreyfuss, the other star, is a visitor here. So now there is a big three day celebration scheduled to wish this movie happy birthday. And they are holding it on Martha's Vineyard, which is where they shot the film, because at the time they thought the place looked more like the Hamptons than the Hamptons did. But in the movie they call it "Amity." Go figure.

ing on. He at first accused Brenda Siemer of kidnapping his old sign — it was his property — but soon relented when he learned that all anybody wanted was for the old sign to be restored and put back up. At about the same time, the Mayor of the village announced that all Mallow had a permit for was removal of the old sign and it's restoration. To replace it with a new and different one would require another kind of permit and they were not likely to grant it. For one thing, the old sign was a pre-existing and non-conforming sign and could only be legally restored as is. If you replaced it, you'd have to put up a much smaller sign. And the second thing was, of course, that the old neon SAG HARBOR sign was an icon of that town. Like everybody else, the Mayor felt the sign was the property of the village residents, rather than the property of Mr. Mallow. He wanted to see it back up too.

At this point, Ms. Siemer had gotten in touch with a man named Clayton Oreck who was in the business of, among other things, restoring old metal signs, and he said he could restore this sign — remake it actually — because after fifty years it was pretty rusted out — for $14,000. By coincidence, his shop also was in Bohemia. The main framework of the sign would have to be made of heavy gauge aluminum rather than the old steel, but it could otherwise be virtually duplicated, with the blue paint baked on at the factory, by a company called Atas.

A fundraiser took place. It was to raise money for Bay Street, the live theatre company that has a stage on Long Wharf, and as an afterthought, Ms. Siemer arranged for Gerry Mallow to donate the word SAG from the old sign so it could be put up for auction. If sold — and they were hoping it would bring $30,000 — half the money would go to Bay Street and half the money would go to the sign maker to restore the old neon sign. In the event, that is exactly what happened. The $30,000 was pledged and paid by architect Peter Cook and his wife, model Christie Brinkley, of Bridgehampton, and the money was split. Ms. Siemer said she would oversee the repair.

At this point, Gerry Mallow stepped in and said he would like Chris Leonard to restore the sign. Chris had been taking care of the sign for years and knew all about it, he said. Ms. Siemer, appreciating that Mallow had donated SAG, agreed to this. Mallow said that Chris would need $8,000 up front. The balance, $6,000 would be paid at the end. The sign would be up and on the wall by April 29, in time for the premiere of FIGHTING TOMMY RILEY.

By the end of March, however, Ms. Siemer found that calls to Chris Leonard were not only not being answered, but quite often his message machine would answer with a message that it was "full" so you could not leave a message.

Alarmed, Ms. Siemer drove to Bohemia.

What she found, she says, came as something of a shock. She never did meet with Chris Leonard, but met instead with his brother Mike, who said that Chris had been going through some rough times, personally, and that Mr. Mallow had never paid him the $8,000 he owed him for making the plastic lettering. He, Mike, had done some work on the new sign, however, and he showed Ms. Siemer the frame for the new sign he had made, but it was very crudely done and was not made of the material required. He had not even contacted Atas, though she told Mike that Chris had known how to get in touch with Atas. She had presumed he had done so.

At this point, she asked to see the templates she had made of the old sign and given to Chris, and also the big letters themselves. Mike showed her that, in the corner on the floor, were the big letters SAG from the old sign. There was no HARBOR.

"Where is HARBOR?" she asked.

"HARBOR has been farmed out," Mike said.

"I also deduced that Chris was no longer in the sign business," Mrs. Siemer told me. "In fact, I was told Mike was now working for another sign company."

Ms. Siemer now called Clayton Oreck, the original signmaker she had wanted to get the sign done. She then ordered that all the templates, pieces of the old sign and other things related to it be sent to him and she told me, breathing a sigh of relief, that Mike had taken that material over to him, including the word HARBOR, which had been rounded up, and which she said had arrived at Oreck's as individual letters rather than as one piece.

And so that is where the matter stands. The hope is that the new sign will be in place by

The Crosses of a Thousand Uses Strike Again in the Hamptons

By Dan Rattiner

Four times during the last eight weeks, you could open a newspaper out here and see a sea of white crosses on a lawn somewhere in the Hamptons, signifying some sort of protest or political position, each one different than the last.

The first appearance of the crosses was on the East Hampton Town green back at the beginning of March. The crosses, together with a few Jewish stars and Muslim crescents, were planted in rows to give us a dramatic and somber reminder of the troops being killed in Iraq. Speeches were made by those opposed to the war. . Banners were held high. It was a dramatic and very newsworthy event. The crosses remained in place for a day.

The second appearance came in late March on the hamlet green in Water Mill, and here, the emphasis was on Supporting Our Troops. A march was held from the hamlet green to Lake Agawam Park in Southampton and speeches were made and banners were held. Reporters were there taking notes and photographers took pictures which again appeared in the newspapers. Once again the crosses stayed in place for a day.

The crosses appeared for the third time on the front lawn of the Middle School on Newtown Lane in East Hampton in mid- April. One of the classes at the school was doing a project on the evils of smoking and all the crosses and stars and moons were out there to signify all those who needlessly died before their time from having smoked tobacco.

Photos of this particular appearance were quite rare, because just a few hours after the school children put the crosses up in the rows, the Superintendent of Schools ordered them removed. The site of the crosses, right in front of the school in the center of town, had been so

THE NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY AND ME

By Dan Rattiner

I installed a very tiny nuclear reactor in my basement last week. It's about four feet tall by three feet wide and it has two wires that I connected to the box containing the circuit breakers. Sure enough, the little metal disk in the LIPA meter outside the house stopped cold. I didn't even have to turn it off. I was on my own, and, for the first time, completely free of my dependency on oil.

The next day, I was visited by two men from the Federal Government. They identified themselves as inspectors from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and they asked me to show them what I had hooked up. We went down to the basement and they had a look.

"Where did you get the uranium?" they asked.

I told them I didn't see where I had to answer that question. I had gotten it. There it was. They left.

Later in the day, they came back, sat me down, handed me a pen and told me to sign a 4000 page document they had brought. It was called the Nuclear Anti-Proliferation Treaty. The very first paragraph said that I was swearing I had consulted a lawyer before signing the document and that I was signing the document after legal advice. But I had not consulted a lawyer. So I told the men to come back in two days and that I wanted to consult with my brother-in-law.

I called him that night. Because of the document's length, he told me to send it to him the next day so he could look at it. I told him I would send it by messenger.

The next day the inspectors were back and when I told them I needed some more time, they got angry, got on a cell phone and called in a general in the Army who had apparently been waiting outside. He told me that the prominent there were immediately many phone calls from people driving by the school. Was this another protest against the war? Did it have something to do with the Pope, who had just died? The kids went back out and took them down.

The fourth appearance of all the crosses was on the front lawn of the Methodist Church in Southampton this past Saturday. It was to mark the thirtieth anniversary of the end of the War in Vietnam. Inside the church there were photographs and short biographies of all the soldiers who have been killed so far in Iraq during these past two years. A reminder that war is war, and we never seem to learn. The display came down on Saturday night.

These are, of course, all the same crosses. They are made of wood which is painted white, and they are being stored in a garage somewhere in the Hamptons, I do not know where, because who knows how or when they might be called upon to be used again. I do not know who originally made them, but believe they were a project this winter supervised by the folks at the American Legion Hall in Amagansett.

As for the general public, going to any of these displays, or reading about them and seeing them in the newspapers, they have gone through a whole array of emotions.

The first, of course, was a deep sorrow and empathy for those that died and an anger with those who ordered the invasion of Iraq. Indeed, the scale of the display was quite something for a small town, to transform a town green like this for one day.

X Marks the Spot

The second appearance of the crosses brought different emotions. Pride. Solidarity with the troops. And, oh, there are the crosses again. Well, I suppose the people in Southampton haven't seen them like the people in East Hampton did. So now it's their turn.

The third appearance, brief as it was, brought emotions that can probably be summed up in a few words, which are, oh, again?

And the fourth appearance, at the church on North Main Street in Southampton, brought emotions of — how many more times are they going to trot these things out?

But you know, if they continue with this, there are going to be some new emotions that come to the fore — and they will be very different. Let us say the crosses are brought out to the front lawn of the Southampton Highway Department in Hampton Bays to signify all those people who have died needlessly on our highways in the past few years, as a reminder to drive safely.

What will happen is that people seeing this display will smile and say — boy, we sure are getting a lot of use out of all these crosses. This is recycling at its best.

And if after that, they appear on the front lawn of the hospital, placed there by anti-abortion people to signify the desires of the unborn, or they are placed in a farm field to signify — oh, I don't know — those who might die if they don't close Millstone One in Connecticut or the Animal Disease Research Center on Plum Island if a disease escapes, well, people will feel a certain delight at the appearance of the crosses once again, and also a certain embarrassment at having those feelings when there are such serious issues at hand.

Ultimately the crosses will become part of the traditions and heritage of our towns. And people will applaud with happiness when they appear. THERE THEY ARE AGAIN!!!

You know, this has happened here before. For many years, at the annual Fourth of July Parade, we had to put up with the North Sea Batmobile. It had been put together by the North Sea Fire Department and it was a wonder to behold. It was so good they entered it into the parade again and again, practically ad infinitum until finally, after years and years, it just began to fall apart and collapse of its own weight.

People to this day say — did you ever wonder

It Goes From One Pocket to Another Pocket to Another Pocket

By Dan Rattiner

My two youngest sons know this story, or at least some of it. And I think inasmuch as money is often a personal matter, I should refrain from identifying them by name.

Last year, son X attended college in Boston. I can afford to send him there. I paid. He did not, however, opt to live in the dormitories. Instead, since it was his third year taking classes there, he shared an apartment with two other boys on a nice street in the city. Since the cost of his share of the apartment was about the same as the cost of living in a dorm, which I had paid the prior year, I now made out a check to the landlord for his share, which was $700. I also sent son X $400 a month for food and incidentals. This matched the meal plan, which he was also not taking.

This year, son Y went off to college in Boston, a different college, but one just a walk away from the one son X attends. I can afford to pay even for two colleges, though barely. I paid. As it happens, son Y's college, which is a music school, does not have dormitories. But though son X and son Y are not particularly close in interests, son X nevertheless invited son Y to take one of the shares in the apartment, the idea being that since son Y is sort of young for his age, it might afford him a shoulder to lean on. I approved the idea.

Son X also said that he and his girl friend wanted to move in together at the apartment. And she would be the third share, for which she would pay $700. At the apartment she was leaving, she was paying $700, so it would be no problem for her, he said.

I had met son X's girl friend and she was certainly nice. But I didn't know her very well. She was in graduate school going for a Masters degree and also working a full time job. So I agreed to this. Except I said it should be $600.

Myself and son X discussed for a while who girlfriend ought to make this check out to. She was not on the lease so she could not make it out directly to the landlord. We decided that, given the various options, she would make it out to me. Then I would pay the landlord.

Son X also said he was getting work at a real estate office, so I would not have to send him the $400 a month. He'd appreciate it however,

FINGERING THE CULPRIT IN THE FINGER CAPER

By Dan Rattiner

Police departments are sometimes criticized for doing shoddy work. Evidence is lost. Clues are overlooked. Witnesses disappear. But sometimes police work is so good that a perpetrator is brought to justice in very short order. And this seems to have been the case in the Finger in the Chili at Wendy's Caper in San Jose, California this spring. The caper will probably be taught in criminal justice classes in colleges around the country for a long time to come. It has also resulted in your being able to go to any Wendy's in the country this weekend where they will give you a free milkshake. But more about that later.

The police were called into the case by Wendy's Vice Presidents on March 22, one week after Anna Ayala, 39, claimed she found a human finger in her beef chili at a Wendy's in San Jose. Nobody disputes this. Ms. Ayala said she was sitting with two friends having a late night meal, when she bit into the digit. She immediately complained to the management. The next day she called Wendy's headquarters seeking $1 million for pain and suffering.

The first thing the police did when they were called in was ask Wendy's officials why they had waited so long to report the matter. Wendy's said they'd consulted with company lawyers who said they did not initially see where any crime had been committed. But now they did. The Vice Presidents said they had talked to all the employees at the Wendy's. None had lost any fingers. They talked to the employees of the nearby factory where the chili was made, frozen and then shipped to the San Jose Wendy's. All of those employees had all their fingers.

Even with all this information, the Vice Presidents told the police, they at first hoped they could settle with Ms. Ayala and, with their fingers crossed, have the whole thing just blow over. But then, everything got out of hand. The word got out. Reporters were everywhere. It was on TV and in the newspapers. And now it was apparent that business in all the Wendy's in northern California was suffer-if I would pay the $300 for the four week course to study to get his license. Also the $200 fee for the test to get the Massachusetts real estate license. Seemed fair enough to me.

It never occurred to me that son Y might get a job, full or part time, for his freshman year. He was embarking on a very intense course of study at one of the most difficult music schools in the country. He should focus on that. Also, he was still a teenager who was out to lunch a lot, or at least out to lunch with his music and musician friends a lot. I gave him a pass.

Two months into this arrangement, son Y, the music student, informed me of something we had all forgotten about.

"Son X's girl friend cooks. It's great. We're all getting along. But I don't have any money to pay for any of the groceries, dad. And it's awkward."

Oh my god. What the hell was I thinking? I asked son Y how much he needed.

"$150 a week would do it," he said.

Here in East Hampton, I do my banking at North Fork. Down the street, however, is Fleet, now Bank of America, where years ago prior to several other mergers when it was still called Norstar, my family started savings and checking accounts for the boys. And so the next day, I went down the street and deposited $150 cash into son Y's checking account.

At this point, I was on the first of every month paying $2,100 to Addison and Huntington, real estate brokers, for the apartment, receiving $600 from girl friend (for which I was feeling increasingly guilty) and, on a monthly payment plan the tuition for two very expensive private colleges in Boston, about $3,000 each month. I was also, once a week, walking into the Bank of America and peeling off $150 in cash to deposit into son Y's account. I was also receiving, weekly, my paycheck, which I was depositing in North Fork Bank, eight doors down.

About three months into this arrangement, son Y called to proudly tell me he was getting terrific grades. He read them to me. Terrific indeed. Son X also called. He's doing fine at school. But the real estate job isn't earning him as much as he wanted, and so he has taken a job one day a week working at a liquor store, and a two day a week job parking cars as a valet at a trendy restaurant.

"My girl friend and I had a fight last night," he said. "About money. Friday night, every week, we go out to a restaurant and a show. Both of us have Friday night off. I'm the guy. So I pay. I also buy the food, which she cooks. This is a traditional relationship. I chase son Y for money for food or the utilities and he pays, but sometimes not for five or six days. And sometimes not at all."

"That sounds like son Y."

"Anyway, the fight we had was about the restaurants. She wants to go to better restaurants. But I can't afford them. I mean, I'm still a college kid. She's a grad student with a full time job. My idea is, I make money, I put it in the bank. Her idea is, I make money and we spend it. Her idea also is that she makes her money and buys clothes and things, and things for me. So I'm getting more jobs."

I slept on this overnight. Girl friend is also sending me $600 of her hard earned money every month. And now son X is taking a full class load and is taking on three jobs.

Miracle

2 Boys in a Boat for 5 Days and a Fisherman from East Hampton

By Debbie Tuma

When Rick Smith left Palm Beach, Florida on April 29 to help bring his boss' 55-foot Hatteras sportfishing boat, The Renegade, back to New Jersey, he never suspected that along the way, he and his captain, Ben DeGutis of North Palm Beach, would be making national headlines for a dramatic sea rescue of two teenage boys on April 30.

Smith, who grew up in East Hampton and spends his life at sea, also never suspected he'd be traveling home from New Jersey in a chauffeured limousine instead of driving his pickup home. But when he and his captain reached Atlantic Highlands Municipal Marina and delivered the boat on May 4, they were met and contacted by many reporters and photographers, and Smith's ride home in the limo was provided gratis by one of New York's daily papers.

"After all these events, between rescuing the boys, and getting calls from all over the country from the press, I was glad to come home and get some time out," said Smith last weekend, at his house in East Hampton. "It's been a long trip, but I'm so happy these boys are alive, and reunited with their families."

Although he's been fishing the waters from the East End to Florida since he learned this sport at the age of eight, Rick Smith, who is 50, had never seen people in such despair as the two teens he helped to save. As he and his captain, Ben DeGutis, 70, of Palm Beach, were making their way up the East Coast, headed for Wrightsville, South Carolina, they decided to change course.

"Suddenly the wind kicked up, it was going to be dark soon, and we were only 15 miles off Cape Fear Inlet, so we decided to go there instead," he recalled. "As we approached the

A GLUT OF TRAFFIC STUDIES CLOGS THE AREA

By Dan Rattiner

If there is one thing the East End is good at, it is in paying experts to come up with reports on our traffic problems. During this last week alone, three different task forces inundated the community with interim or preliminary or semi-final reports. They are the Institute for Sustainable Development (EST), Sustainable East End Development Strategies (SEEDS) and Five Town Rural Transit Inc. (5TRT.)

The essence of all of these reports, which I believe probably involved fifty experts and maybe a million dollars all together, is that we should get people to use bicycles more, use buses more, and — and this is in every report — the single line railroad track more. There are experts who cannot believe we have this perfectly good railroad track going out to the East End and there are maybe five trains going by a day.

They call this track the "spine." There ought to be light transit trains or trollies going up and down this railroad track every ten minutes. And there ought to be buses that collect the people as they get out at the various stops to take them out from this spine along a variety of ribs to wherever the hell it is they want to go. Maybe to their bicycles. And then, when they are done, the bicycles take them back to the buses which come in on the ribs to the spine which puts them on the trolley that takes them to the transportation hub — it's always at the Gabreski Airport in Westhampton — and at that location onto fast regular trains which whoosh them back up the island to wherever they came from.

Did I get all that right? It's all in these reports and in reports from two years ago and five years ago and I can tell it to you too, and I don't have to be charging hundreds of thousands of dollars.

inlet, about 4 p.m., we saw something in the distance, which looked like a loose buoy bobbing on the ocean."

As they neared the object, they spotted a boy waving and yelling from the hull of a small sailboat.

"I couldn't believe there were two people on this tiny boat, and they looked terrible—all sunburned and blistered," said Smith. "The younger one, who looked the worst, yelled, 'Don't leave.' He said the boys were hysterical, laughing and crying, and "sort of out of it, like they had been there a long time, with nothing to eat or drink."

Troy Driscoll, 15, and Josh Long, 18, who lived near Charleston, South Carolina, had been helplessly sitting in the remains of their 12-foot Sunfish for five long days and nights, with no sail or motor, and only the clothes on their backs. They had no supplies or protection from the elements, since their boat had been swept out to sea by high winds.

A week earlier, they had been lazily fishing the inland waters off Sullivans Island, South Carolina, in their cramped sailboat named "Under Construction." They had not taken food or water, since they had never planned to go far from the shore, but strong winds had suddenly pushed them farther out into the Atlantic Ocean. In order to survive, they had lived on jellyfish, seawater, and the occasional rainwater that would seep into the boat. Early on, they prayed for rescue. Toward the end, the boys were praying to die.

Smith said he and DeGutis got the boys aboard the Renegade, and decided to leave their boat behind to save time in getting them to shore.

"They were so weak, they could barely stand up, and barely talk," said Smith. "The younger kid, Troy, was in worse shape—his tongue was white, he was really dehydrated, and badly sunburned, and had sores on his body. He was wearing jeans, a shirt and sneakers, and Josh was just wearing wetsuit bottoms and had bare feet. I think they were sharing the shirt between them." Smith said the boys told him they had also shared a piece of canvas for shade during the hot, sunny days, and that they had hung overboard to stay cool. During the cold nights, they struggled to stay warm, huddled inside the small boat.

Smith, who had some first aid training, gave the boys some water and told then to drink it slowly, but he said, "They were so thirsty, they chugged down almost two gallons, and I was afraid they might get sick, but they didn't. I gave them warm blankets, because they were shaking."

Smith said he "couldn't believe" all the mental hardships the boys had had to endure during their stranding at sea, including one incident when a black tip shark kept banging against the boat and they were afraid they'd tip over, and another when a huge barge went by, and the wake nearly knocked them over.

"One of the hardest things for them was seeing other boats go by, and not being recognized, since they were so small," said Smith. He immediately called the Coast Guard, which sent a raft to the Renegade, but the waters were too rough for the boys to get in.

"We had to take the boys right into the Cape Fear Inlet, where the water was calm, and then they were able to get into the Coast Guard raft, and then the ambulance, which was waiting at the dock," said Smith.

After reaching New Jersey, where the boat was to remain, Captain Ben DeGutis returned to his home in Florida, on his way to a fishing tournament in the Bahamas. Reached at his home, DeGutis said he was "very happy" that he and Smith were able to rescue these boys and that they had been in the "right place at the right time."

Smith said since he's been home, he has gotten several calls from both boys and their families. "Troy said he was praying for angels to rescue him, and that we were his angels," said Smith.

He said Josh Long's mother told him, "Thanks for giving me my life back. I always lived on, and loved, the ocean, but if Josh was gone, I don't think I could ever look at the ocean again."

"Since they had been praying to be found, the whole time at sea, they have both gone to church, and talked about their experience there," said Smith. "The families have expressed an interest in getting together with me and Ben again. I am hoping to bring the boys up to Montauk this summer to go shark fishing. Believe it or not, they can't wait to go fishing. It's in their blood."

Do I Hear $1.5 Million? A House Goes up for Auction in Sag Harbor

By Harriet Edwards

The day was chilly and the sky threatened rain, but by 10:45 a.m. last Friday, Anselm Morpugo was stationed at the entrance to the Municipal Building in Sag Harbor, awaiting the public auction of the house that she and her sister own jointly (although this is a point of contention; Anselm says she is the sole owner).

"What do you expect?" I asked her.

"I expect lively bidding, getting the price well above the minimum bid of a million and a half dollars, and then we can all gather at the American Hotel and celebrate with champagne! See?" she said, indicating her bright green sweatpants. "Just as I said, I am wearing green."

By the appointed hour of 11, a crowd of about 100, which included reporters from all the local newspapers and even the New York Times, had gathered on the sidewalk and spilled onto Main Street. Auctioneer Steven Grossman began the proceedings by reading the Terms of Sale, a fairly lengthy list of legalese explaining penalties, deadlines for money exchange and the like. As he read the fifth condition, a construction worker at Jeff and Eddy's, across the way, began drilling in the street; after much protest from the crowd and Mr. Grossman, he desisted.

The reading of the terms concluded, Mr. Grossman intoned, "Do I hear a bid of one and a half million dollars?" Silence. Again, "Do I hear a bid of one and a half million dollars?" Again, silence. Twice more he called for a bid, then consulted with the village lawyer. Returning, he asked twice more for the minimum bid, and again there was silence. "In the absence of an acceptable bid," he then announced, "I declare this auction closed." And he stepped down.

WORSHIPPING THE LORD IN SOUTHAMPTON

By Mark Greenstein

Rabbi Rafe Konikov is the spiritual leader of the Chabad of Southhampton. He teaches Hebrew to anyone who wants to learn. He provides spiritual guidance and often can be found at the local hospitals, hospices and nursing homes visiting the sick and dying and seeking to give them comfort and trying to lift the spirits of the ill and elderly.

"Hi, I'm Rabbi Rafe Konikov," he tells them as he pokes his head into their hospital room. "Is there anything I can do to assist you?" he asks with a cheerful smile to everyone no matter what their faith or religious denomination.

"It's about a real commitment to community members," he says. "It's not about trying to convert those of other faiths. That is not our mission. It is to aid, comfort and offer spiritual counseling."

Rabbi Konikov holds Saturday services (Sabbath) and other Jewish holiday services from his Hill Street residence in Southampton village, which some neighbors seem to object to.

Neighbor Christine Triant feel this is not the best place for a congregation for people attending Rabbi Konikov's services. "Why did they select this tiny little property?" she asked, "It's not a terrible thing but it is the nature of religious uses to grow their congregation."

Other neighbors are concerned about the potential for cars being parked all around the home and surrounding neighborhood from people attending services there. They are also concerned about the potential of lowering local property values.

Representing the neighbors who filed a lawsuit against the Chabad house is attorney David Perez, who said, "Federal law requires that you accommodate religious uses, not obliterate zoning codes."

Faintly disappointed onlookers, who had perhaps wished for a surprise bidding war or a catfight between the sisters, milled about in small groups, discussing the decrepit condition of the property (general agreement), its actual value (wild variations), the possibilities for restoring it, razing it, giving it to the John Jermain library, and other ideas, including a fortuitous lightning strike. (The library has formed a Citizen's Committee to advise on the future of the library, with or without the Morpugo property.) The Mayor observed that there were more people at this "non-event" than had ever come to a Village Board meeting.

Anselm Morpugo said, "Well, it goes to show that the Godfather is running the show," by which she said she meant the library, although it is hard to imagine how they could have stopped all bidders. She also termed the Future Fund, which is not actually connected to the library, as "a fraud, and a front for developers trying to get their hands on my property." Across the way, her sister Helga told listening bystanders that she would return to court and get a new date for another auction, one that would be better publicized and therefore draw more interested parties. She, too, blamed the library for the unsuccessful nature of the event.

By noon, the crowd had dispersed, traffic had returned to normal, the workman had taken up his drilling, the sky still threatened rain, and at 6 Union Street the Morpugo house continued its genteel disintegration.

As we went to press, Helga Morpugo called with the news that Duncan Foster of Los Angeles, who also owns a house in Bridgehampton, is expressing "serious interest" in purchasing the house, and is planning to restore it to its original state. But the negotiations continue and it is not yet definite.

what happened to the North Sea Batmobile?

In East Hampton one year, somebody got the idea years and years ago that the town ought to buy one of these amphibian cars that floats in the water, and lowers its wheels and drives up onto the shore. It was not an ordinary amphibian car. It was a sort of amphibian tank, built by the military, now surplus, that the Town could purchase for a dollar. They did.

For years and years, a week before Christmas, Santa Claus would arrive in this amphibian tank, standing up in it dressed in his red suit, waving to all the children who had been brought there to watch him do this. I have a wonderful memory of my own father, as Santa Claus, coming ashore years and years ago in this vehicle at Star Island to the cheers of all the children.

The last I saw of this amphibian, it was parked behind Town Hall in a field on Pantigo Road in East Hampton. It might still be there for all I know.

As for me, as publisher of Dan's Papers, I'm making an editorial decision to go easy on pictures of the crosses. Someone has suggested that they be set up in a field but tipped sideways forty-five degrees, so they make a kind of X.

There's a whole different set of possibilities for a field of white X's. Croquet Gone Wild comes to mind. Or a display of those who have had their identities stolen in a computer theft and are now just nameless X's. Or something with the Witness Protection Program.

Can a Jewish Star be tipped forty five degrees?

ing, off 20 to 50%. Somebody with nine other fingers was still out there. Who knew where they might strike next? This was an irrational thought. But there it was. So now, Wendy's could no longer just sit on their hands. They would have to try to finger the perpetrator.

Next the police spoke to Ms. Ayala, who was back at her home in Las Vegas. It was terrible, she told them. You have no idea what it was like. The police ran a record on Ms. Ayala. It came up clean. But something did not seem quite right, although they couldn't put their finger on it.

The police then spoke to the two friends who were in the Wendy's with Ms. Ayala. Both of them, it turned out, were related to her.

Now police officers both in Las Vegas and San Jose fanned out into the community to do a full-scale investigation. They soon found there had been more than a dozen claims made by Ms. Ayala against various companies. She had sued a Chevy dealer after a wheel came off her car. She had sued an El Pollo Loco restaurant after her daughter got sick eating there. She had filed a sexual harassment lawsuit against a business where she worked. In some

Shovel This

A Flock of Shovels Tries to Make Its Way to the Land of Milk & Honey

By Christian McLean

"Grove" a site-specific installation by California-based sculptor John Hillis Sanders, has been on display on the grounds of Southampton College since April 25th and will remain until June 6th. The rows of shovels protruding from the earth have been interpreted as a spiritual work symbolizing growth, change, and rebirth. The writer of this article has another interpretation.

It's a slow spring for shovels on the East End. "The work just isn't there," said Peter Scoops, President of SOLO (Shovel Operation Labor Organization). "But we've unionized and I think the summer will be better," he added.

For right now, the outlook doesn't seem so bright. Since April 25th, hundreds of long-handled shovels have gathered at Southampton College in an attempt to sort out a solution to the labor shortage and claim to be holding assembly until June 6th when they will be forced to disband from the college.

Clearly there was confusion for some as to why the shovels, which have migrated from the timber forests of California and steel factories in Pennsylvania, have made their home here in the Hamptons, but the truth is, it happens year after year. "Shovels are out here every summer, but by this time of year they're usually working. They're on construction sites, they're on landscaping trucks," a local Southampton resident told reporters.

Many blame the seeming prevalence of shovels on a slower-than-usual real estate season. With fewer people building houses and renting, there is less work in construction and landscaping. "It's a trickle down system, and at the bottom are all the shovels. I wish there was something we could do about it, but there isn't," said Betty Housale of Housale Realty. And that's just it, there doesn't seem to be anything anyone can do about it and it is tearing the Hamptons in half.

Not everyone is behind the shovels, some even calling them and their attempt to organize a blight on the community. In a recent event

HORRIFIC TRAFFIC ACCIDENT IN RIVERHEAD

By Dan Rattiner

The Riverhead Volunteer Ambulance Corps was founded 28 years ago by interested private citizens of that town, to bring people to the hospital on an emergency basis for treatment. It's like many such organizations on the East End. They have a garage where the ambulance, or in this case, two ambulances, are kept. They hold fundraisers. And anyone is welcome to volunteer, go through the training, and if successful, be certified to go out on calls. The calls for help come anytime day or night, and members check in with a dispatcher to see if they are needed. If they are, they drop whatever they are doing and head off to the ambulance barn.

The Riverhead Corps is one of the prides of that town. It has about 100 members, and, during the course of a year, responds to an average of about eight calls a day. Over the years, though it is dangerous work racing to get people to a hospital, there has never been a fatality among the volunteers. Until last Tuesday.

On that day, around 1:25 p.m., three members of the corps responded to a call in Aquebogue, where. they were told a 67-year-old man was suffering from chest pains. The three who responded were Eric Maas, 29, who was the driver, Heidi Behr of Riverhead, 23, who is training to be a paramedic but is a qualified corpsman, and William Stone, 30, of Ridge, who has worked as a paid paramedic at North Shore University Hospital and now is a volunteer for the Riverhead Corps. Stone was in charge of the call. Behr assisted.

The three arrived in their ambulance at the scene about 1:35 p.m., helped their patient, Joseph Wowack, to a gurney, wheeled him into the back of the ambulance and, when they were settled, headed out onto Route 25 west toward the Central Suffolk Hospital in at Seven-Eleven, where the shovels gather on weekday mornings looking for anyone with a need to dig a hole, slurs like "mud harvester" and comments like "Go back to the forest you came from," were shouted from the window of a passing truck. When I asked a few shovels if they were offended by the comments, I was told that it happened all the time, that they've grown used to it. "We're here to work, we don't want to upset the applecart, but we're gonna dig ourselves in and stay," said Woodly Handel.

And dig in they have. Through heavy rains and stormy weather, the shovels have stood tall in Southampton; not verbally voicing their opinions, but through a somber show of solidarity, these tools have made their voices heard.

Talking to a vacationing snow shovel, I was told, "the winter was great, there was steady work, with overtime." The snow shovel had heard about the rally and thought she would stop by and show her support adding, "There are women shovels too, shovels with children. Shovels that need food and shelter."

The influx of shovels has resulted in a shortage of housing. Tool sheds are filled to the brim in some locations, and angered neighbors are getting frustrated. "First it's one shovel, then it's two, by the end of May there are twelve or fifteen shovels, plus rakes, hedge clippers, and g-d knows what else! The door barely closes anymore and by midnight, there's ten hoes packed in there as well. It's infuriating. Did you hear that crash? That was my property value dropping," a Noyac man commented. But those shovels are the fortunate ones. Naive shovels have arrived under the promise of a bed, only to discover it is nothing more than a flower bed and spend their nights in the cold and rain.

Some shovels have been lucky; they've found cushy jobs as window models in hardware stores. But even then, it's not easy street. "For one thing, they're calling me a scab, and for another, keeping the same pose for twelve hours a day isn't exactly a walk in the park. I mean, it's not ditch digging, but it's not exactly the good life."

Sadly, there are thousands of stories about shovels that have come out to the Hamptons with a strong handle, a hard head and a do-anything mindset, only to find themselves without work. Peter Scoops seems to think SOLO is a step in the right direction, that an organized labor union will lead to jobs, jobs which the shovel community desperately needs to survive.

It seems that whether the Hamptons wants the shovels or not, they're here for the season. "We're not about to give up," said Mr. Scoops, "and by golly, we're not going to bury our heads in the sand and pretend that we don't know what's going on in the community. We deserve proper representation, and I feel that through hard work and keeping a stiff upper lip, we'll come out on top."

So if you pass by Southampton College and see strong, hard working shovels standing in rows of brotherhood and solidarity, think about planting a tree, or visiting your local hardware store to adopt a shovel of your own. Think about what it's going to take to help rectify the situation in your own backyard.

The next morning, I am standing in line at the Bank of America about to deposit $150 in son Y's account, thinking about all this money flying around in every direction, which includes the $100 that is not accounted for but which gets included to Addison and Huntington and I made a decision. I take out a cell phone and hit speed dial for son X.

"I'm sending you the $400 like last year until you graduate in May," I tell him. "Be nice to your girl friend."

Then I put $150 in son Y's bank account. Also $100 in son X's bank account. I'm going to deposit money to the two of them at the same time. So I'm going to dole out the $400 a month to son X, $100 at a time. He'll figure it out. And why not $150 for son X? Son X works. And he should. He's older. And I gave son Y a pass this year. Wait. Here's the monthly check from the girl friend. I've got to run down to the other bank.

E.L. Doctorow
Novelist

By Emily J Weitz

"The writer isn't made in a vacuum. Writers are witnesses. The reason we need writers is because we need witnesses to this terrifying century."— E.L. Doctorow

Edgar Lawrence Doctorow was born in the Bronx, New York on January 6, 1931 with the fate of a writer already laid out. He was named after Edgar Allen Poe, and was an avid reader from his early years. Two of Doctorow's favorite writers were Poe and Fyodor Dostoevsky. On looking back at his childhood, Doctorow once said that "at that age, something else happens if you're going to be a writer. You're reading for the excitement of it... and then another little line of inquiry comes into your head: 'How is this done?'"

He was surrounded by musical influences since birth; his father owned a small music shop and his mother was a pianist. He recalled that whenever his mother got upset, she listened to Chopin's "Revolutionary Etude," a song that certainly still holds strong associations today. He went to the prestigious Bronx High School of Science and then received his Bachelor of Arts from Kenyon College.

Upon graduating from Kenyon in 1953, Doctorow followed the path that many writers walk as a means of survival: he got into publishing. He recalled that time in his life being filled with twenty-hour days, where he would work at the office editing other people's works, and then he would resign himself to his typewriter in the evenings. He was a reader for Columbia pictures for three years, and then he started working for New American Library, where he ascended the ranks to Senior Editor by the early 1960s. From 1964 to 1969 he worked at Dial Press becoming acquainted with such literary greats as Norman Mailer, James Baldwin, and Ann Moody. However, as focus is one of the principal requirements for a novelist, Doctorow found that in order to pursue his great passion, he would need to devote his energy entirely to his own work.

In 1969, he had that chance when he was appointed Writer-In-Residence at the University of California at Irvine.

Doctorow's first book, Welcome to Hard Times, was published in 1960, while he was still at New American Library. It was inspired by his first job as a reader at Columbia Pictures. His second novel, Big as Life (1966), is probably his most unusual, and he has called it "Unquestionably, the worst I've done." But it was with his third novel, The Book of Daniel (1971) that Doctorow attained both fame and respect in the literary world. It is a fictional biography that explores the life of a man whose parents were executed during the Cold War, and is a political commentary on the anti-communism fervor of the 1950s in America. The novel tells the fictionalized story of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, who were executed for giving nuclear secrets to the Soviet Union. It was nominated for a National Book Award. This blend of fact and fiction has become a trademark of Doctorow's writing style. With this manner of writing, he has been able to create sympathetic characters while expressing philosophical views that he wants to bring to the table.

Big as Life is his most unusual, and he has called it "Unquestionably, the worst I've done."

One novel that serves as an exception to this style is Ragtime, which also blends fact and invention, but, according to Doctorow, concentrates more on a sense of motion. This characteristic, which makes a book a page-turner, comes by sacrificing some of the psychological depth and complexity that Doctorow usually makes his priority.

After the success of The Book of Daniel, Doctorow continued to develop his style with novels, short stories, and a play. He is known for his political outspokenness, and has expressed his views on the current state of the union at every opportunity. In September, 2004, he wrote an article called "The Unfeeling President," in which he articulated his disdain for the president with such words as "You do not go to war when it is one of the options but when it is the only option; you go not because you want to but because you have to."

This political stance brought more publicity to Doctorow before that article when, in May of 2004, he spoke at the commencement ceremony at Hofstra University. According to Doctorow, he was simply urging graduates to assume their role in history and to become actively engaged in their own lives. He told them that authority should always be questioned, but he was saying it to a divided audience of those in agreement and those actively booing him. When later discussing the incident on the Diane Rehm show, he got a call from an angry parent who claimed that he gave a one-sided speech against the president to a captive audience. Doctorow stated that he was just encouraging responsible citizenship.

Most recently, Doctorow published a compilation of stories called Sweet Land Stories (2004). One of the tales, called "Child, Dead, in the Rose Garden," again infuses fact and fiction to express his personal views. It is the story of the daughter of a wealthy, pro-President Texas tycoon. She tries to publicize the bad policies of the White House by staging a mock crime. When discussing this book, Doctorow said that "you do fall in love with your characters... You think of them as real people."

E.L. Doctorow is married to Helen Henslee, who has recently published a book of her own, called Pretty Redwing. She wrote it after their three children had grown up and left home. The couple shares a house in New Rochelle, and they also have a home in Sag Harbor. Doctorow has spoken around town, has participated in the Southampton Writers' Conference, and was a recipient of the John Steinbeck Award at Southampton College.

cases she had won settlements. In others, she just dropped the matter. It seemed Ms. Ayala had a finger in every pie.

And someone was suing her. A former live in boyfriend had come home one day to find that she had sold the mobile home they had in the driveway for $11,000. It belonged to him. But she kept the money. And he left her.

Then, just ten days ago, a police sergeant in the San Jose precinct had a breakthrough idea. Whatever happened to the finger? If you could find it, couldn't you determine if it had been cooked?

It turned out Wendy's still had it. The night of the event, Ms. Ayala had brought the Wendy's assistant manager to her table to show him the finger. After apologizing profusely, he had the presence of mind to scoop it up, put it in a plastic bag and take it to a freezer in the back of the restaurant for safe keeping. It was still there.

The police sent the finger out to their forensic lab to determine if it had been cooked. The report came back last Friday. It concluded that "the finger was not consistent with an object that had been cooked in chili at 170 degrees for three hours."

The cooking for three hours at 170 degrees is how Wendy's makes chili.

The police then went back a second time to talk with the assistant manager and all of the employees who had been on duty the night of the incident. They didn't want anything slipping through their fingers with this case. Had any of the employees cleaned up throw up? None had.

Given all this evidence, on Wednesday, April 20 at four in the afternoon, police officers, with itchy fingers poised over triggers, surrounded the Ayala residence in Nevada, knocked on the door and when Ms. Ayala opened it, fingered their perp. She was then charged with attempted grand larceny, an offense that could result in two years in jail. Ms. Ayala came quietly. She is currently incarcerated in Las Vegas pending $500,000 bail and is awaiting extradition to California. There might also be additional charges of being in illegal possession of a human digit.

The one remaining question is — how did the finger get in the chili? Ms. Ayala's fate hangs on the answer to that question and the authorities are keeping their fingers crossed. If it can be shown that she put the finger in, she will surely be convicted. But even in jail, she continues to deny any digital connection, in spite of intense police grilling.

Could she have brought the finger into the Wendy's with her? Police are focusing on two objects witnesses say had been in Ms. Ayala's possession that night. One was a WalMart shopping bag. The other was a small fishing tackle box in which she kept cosmetics. Both were found by the police when they searched Ms. Ayala's home. Perhaps there are vestiges of DNA on either the box or the bag that can be matched to the digit.

There is also the issue of where, if Ms. Ayala had the finger with her, she got it. It is an index digit. And though the lab scientists are not able to determine its sex, its nail had been painted red, so it is likely female, though it could be from a male cross dresser. Perhaps Ms. Ayala nail polished it herself with something from her fishing tackle box to confuse everybody. But where had she gotten it?

Officials at hospitals, morgues and funeral parlors are being questioned. Signs have been put up. Anyone with any information about a person with a missing digit, dead or alive, is urged to contact the authorities. So far, nothing.

If no one steps forward to connect Ms. Ayala to the finger, then Ms. Ayala will likely go free. A person is innocent until proven guilty, after all. And it is certainly possible that the finger got into the chili sometime between the restaurant kitchen and Ms. Ayala's dining table. Deranged or disgruntled employees have done far worse. Perhaps the ex-boyfriend, in disguise, had, feigning butter fingers, dropped it in as he rushed by. At trial, a defense lawyer could do a lot of finger pointing.

In jail, Ms. Ayala, fingering her food at mealtime, is undoubtedly thinking about it. She might get cleared of criminal charges, but civil charges will surely be filed by Wendy's, who will point to an estimated $40 million in damages from lost business. In civil court, for a conviction, all you need is a preponderance of evi-

United States had six thousand nuclear weapons and this was a great many more than however many of them I was planning to build and if I proceeded he would, after consulting with President Bush, blow me and my house to kingdom come. I told him I only was intending to use my nuclear reactor for peaceful purposes and I would not respond to intimidation by him or anybody else.

He clicked his heels, saluted, and left.

The next day I spoke to my brother-in-law who told me he was outraged by what the general had said, but that I should sign the agreement because there was a loophole in it that everybody used that said anybody could use nuclear power for peaceful purposes.

Later in the day the inspectors returned with the general and I told them I would not sign the document.

"My LIPA bill is through the roof," I said. "I only intend to use nuclear power for peaceful purposes. Anyway, I read the document and it has this loophole. Also it says that the people who already have nuclear weapons can keep them and so this is for everybody else. I won't participate in such a sham. It should be everybody or nobody."

Still later that afternoon, some diplomats from Russia, China, India, Pakistan, North Korea and France came over and I could not understand a word they said. But I gave them all tea.

We got down to serious negotiations the next morning. There were people from nine countries involved, and the idea was that they give me things and when it's enough I would agree to give up my little nuclear reactor set up.

"I want a million dollars," I told them. "And free electricity even if I am the only person on the earth to have any electricity. Also free cable TV."

They came back later in the day and I gave them more tea but they were all waiting for instructions from their governments. Then there was a lot of wrangling among them. And about midnight they came in and told me I could have free cable TV, but that was it. I told them if that was all they were offering I was going to walk.

I can't tell you how upset I have become over all of this. Yesterday, I set up some folding chairs in my backyard in a semi-circle, and got a shovel and dug a hole so they were all facing it. When the group came by they said their spy planes had seen this arrangement from the air and what was I doing? Planning to have a test firing?

"I told you my nuclear reactor is only for peaceful purposes. I am inviting the neighbors over. We are going to have a fish roast."

I then told them that because of their meddling, all my neighbors were too scared to come to the fish roast and I would have to return all the chairs to my garage.

"And I don't want any planes flying over my house," I told them. "And I want a million dollars and free electricity, no matter what, and a Lincoln Town Car."

Nobody came today. But there is a big black Lincoln Town Car parked out front with a bow on it. You know what? I don't want it. This negotiation is over. They can all go back where they came from.

I called my brother-in-law and he asked if anybody is using the Town Car, because he has tickets to a Yankee game. I told him no. Come and get it. What I want now is one hour every week when I can bring to a checkout counter at Wal-Mart everything I can, once a week for life. Also a million dollars. And free electricity.

But now there's been a note slipped under my door asking if we could all meet again tomorrow.

How come my brother-in-law is not inviting me to the Yankee game? •

Riverhead, lights flashing and sirens sounding.

The accident happened shortly after they left the Wowack house and were speeding on Route 25 up a hill toward the intersection of Church Lane. They were behind a large dump truck and as they approached, the truck moved over to the shoulder on the right as if to let them pass. And so Maas began to do so. But the driver of the truck, John White, was only pulling off to the right to begin a wide left turn into a driveway, and as he began that left turn, Maas, driving the ambulance, was forced to his left to avoid hitting it. In doing so, he lost control of the ambulance and slammed into a tree on the left side of the road, shearing off the whole left side of the ambulance, scattering medical supplies everywhere, and, apparently, killing both the paramedic and his assistant instantly. The ambulance remained stationary for a few moments, partially wrapped around the tree, and then slowly rolled down the hill to come to a stop at the bottom. It was a horrible accident with no eyewitnesses, but it was at least heard by several workers at a gas station down the road, who ran over.

Wowack, safely strapped in, survived, as did Maas, though both were injured and taken to Central Suffolk Hospital in another ambulance that arrived shortly thereafter. Maas underwent surgery Friday and stayed there over the weekend. Wowack was transferred to Stony Brook University Hospital and underwent surgery there.

Heidi Behr

Immediately after the accident occurred, after the police arrived, members of the ambulance corps, hearing of the accident over the police radio, came from all over the town to the scene. They stayed there, weeping and holding one another as the police picked through the wreckage. That evening the corpsmen and their families went to the ambulance barn to further mourn their loss. They watched as a cherry picker lifted black bunting over the barn doors in memory of the two who had died.

At the scene, White had told police that he had his left blinker on when he pulled over to the right to make his left turn. Maas, interviewed in the hospital, said he did not see one. In the end, no charges were filed in what police seem believe was just an unfortunate and unavoidable accident.

William Stone of Ridge had been a paramedic with Suffolk County for six years before joining the Riverhead volunteers in March. He was engaged to be married.

Heidi Behr was a graduate of Riverhead High School studying at Eastern Suffolk Community College in Riverhead while living at home with her parents. The corps had been an important part of her life for years. She was named Corpsman of the Year in 2002, an award given for general excellence and in 2005 she was named a Lieutenant. She is the mother of a 14-month-old son who has Cerebral Palsy. Heidi's parents, John Behr, who is a retired Captain from the Riverhead Fire Department, and his wife, June, intend to raise their grandson now with the help of Heidi's sister, Dana. • dence pointing in a particular direction. Not that Ms. Ayala could pay any large sum of money. It's the principle of the thing that is the whole point.

In any case, the investigative work done by the police in the Finger in the Chili at Wendy's Caper is something to be pointed to with pride. Nothing has slipped through anybody's fingers, not in California, nor in Nevada.

I did promise you a free shake at Wendy's if you got through all this. This weekend, in a great thank you to its customer base and as a public relations gesture, Wendy's is offering everybody who stops in to one of their restaurants a free shake of their choice, no questions asked, for believing in them in spite of the nefarious efforts of that scoundrel (whatever her name was) who is now in custody.

Wendy's spin doctors thought long and hard before making this gesture. After much discussion they have come up with the idea of calling the episode the "chili finger" incident, apparently in the belief that since this has the ring of Chicken fingers, another item known to be on fast menus, they won't think much more about it.

In fact, Wendy's lost millions of dollars during this episode, an estimated 2% of their business on the West Coast. Still, they love us. Go and have a drink on Anna Ayala. •

At the meeting of the Southampton Village Zoning Board of Appeals, April 28th in Southampton Village, the attorney for Chabad and Rabbi Konikov was Jeffrey Bragman.

He requested a special exemption use permit. This permit would allow a house of worship in a residential neighborhood. Mr. Bragman hopes to secure variances required to legalize the building since the house where the services are currently held does not meet village zoning code requirements. These include: village lot size requirements for religious facilities, lot width, setback regulations and parking requirements.

Jeffrey Bragman said, "State laws generally tell municipalities that they have to find a way to accommodate churches and temples where they are proposed. Accommodations work both ways and we respect that. We recognize that we have an obligation to work with the village by limiting the number of attendees to no more than 35 between October and May, no more than 65 during the busier summer months and permission for 3 special events a year when it could host up to 80 people."

Bragman continued, "the better we understand the zoning board's concerns and the better they understand us, the easier this process will be and the easier it will be for us to come together on this issue. Courts know and acknowledge that churches provide overwhelming positive benefits to the communities. Parking problems are not a basis to deny our requests. Churches are not exempt from zoning laws; nonetheless you've got to be flexible and accommodating to get this approved. We will try to show the zoning board that we are willing to accommodate the village by finding a parking solution, an improved septic system and limited occupancy solutions."

Mr. Bragman references a decision handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court that orders municipal governments to give religious institutions considerable leeway in determining zoning regulations. "Judges have repeatedly ruled that religious institutions cannot be boxed out of residential neighborhoods.

"Virtually all the churches in this community are concentrated in the most populated areas. Virtually none of them are in compliance with Southampton's zoning regulations."

Rabbi Konikov told me, "Every person in the Southampton community is important to us no matter what their religious beliefs.

"Jeff Bragman presented a terrific case at the zoning meeting," Rabbi Konikov said, "In fact we have the support of the heads of Southampton's religious community. Four major church affiliations, the Sacred Heart Catholic Church, the Presbyterian, Methodist and Episcopalian churches have all written letters of support for our cause and are behind us. We are the first synagogue in the Southampton Village. We are here to promote spiritual awareness, understanding and unity to the Jewish community of Southampton. We have created a cohesive Jewish community; sense of belonging and appreciation of Jewish heritage for our congregation in the Village of Southampton," the Rabbi explained.

Rabbi Konikov is originally from Springfield, Massachusetts. He was born in 1969. He attended the Rabbinical School of New England and Rabbinical School of America in Morristown, New Jersey. He is an ordained rabbi from Chabad Lubavitch at 770 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn.

One of these groups of experts did propose something I found intriguing. In addition to all the above, they suggest that there be a water taxi service in the summertime that would flit people from town to town, between docks at Montauk Harbor, at Three Mile Harbor, at Sag Harbor's Long Wharf, at Conscience Point in North Sea, at Hampton Bays, and at downtown Westhampton Beach.

The water taxis — according to whoever it was that dreamed this up — would be like the water taxis they have in Venice, called Vaporetto, but smaller. And people would sit out on the decks of them on starry nights and drift along, maybe twenty-five people on a pocket Vaporetto singing Operas to one another and accompanied by a Frenchman on an accordian. It sounds really good.

The only spot where they are proposing a landing at a dock that didn't make sense that I could see was at Three Mile Harbor. That's the Harbor where I have my house. And I don't want any unwashed Venetian tourists tramping around in the grass where I live, taking pictures,, eating ice cream or glace or whatever. All the other places for the vaporetto, however, are just fine. Got my vote.

Incidentally, it was also announced this past week that the planned improvements on the back roads motorists use to avoid the Montauk Highway — Millstone Road, Scuttlehole Road and all the rest, which are now so backed up with traffic jams — are not going to get done by summertime. So they are postponing doing them to the fall. These improvements included roundabouts, bike lanes, rumble strips and curbing. All will have to wait.

My opinion? Back in January they should have rounded up all these experts running around with clipboards putting together the traffic studies, give them shovels and hard hats and sent them out with the workmen to get the improvements done. Instead, here it is summer and we have no improvements, but a mountain of reports, all of which say exactly the same thing that's been said for years in other reports. •

Memorial Day Weekend, but Oreck says he can't make any promises.

In any case, it seems it might be time for a further fundraiser to make up the money already given to Chris.

Some further thoughts.

1. The rusty old word SAG now belongs to Christie Brinkley and Peter Cook. They paid for it. Perhaps it should be delivered to their doorstep. Perhaps not.

2. I'm told an electrician has agreed to light up the sign once it's up free of charge. This is a fine gift for Mr. Mallow if he would choose to take it.

3. If ten years go by and the old neon sign is not back up, it will never go back up. Not because the law would not allow it to go back up — it would probably be beyond any reasonable time allowed for a repair, but that would not be a problem as I am sure the Village would give all the time necessary — but it will not go back up because the town will have gotten used to Sag Harbor without the SAG HARBOR. It must have looked pretty wild when they first put it up sixty years ago, before zoning. Before it became an institution and a symbol for the town. When memories fade, NOT having it will be an institution and symbol for the town.

4. I see Julia Roberts as Brenda Siemer in the starring role in the movie, with Jack Nicholson as Gerry Mallow and Keanu Reeves as J. P. Davis. (Or how about J. P. Davis as J. P. Davis?)

I spoke to Mr. Mallow about the situation just as we go to press. He said Ms. Siemer was handling things, he didn't know the details and he just hoped the sign would be up soon. •

The 28th Annual Meet the Writers Book Fair took place this past Friday evening at Southampton College. Under a tent behind Chancellor Hall Joe Pintauro received the 17th Annual John Steinbeck Award. Chancellor, Robert F. X. Sillerman spoke with sadness of the uncertain future of the college and the Book Fair. Attendance was excellent considering the temperature and the rain. A gift of garden gloves commemorating the Book Fair and the Elaine Benson Gallery which hosted the Fair for 25 years helped keep us warm. Honoring playwright, poet, and novelist Joe Pintauro was a strong desire of both Elaine Benson and Elaine Steinbeck. A dream became a reality! The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #348
Just Do What Simon Says...

So this girl gets cold feet and takes a bus across the country to escape her wedding. Her boyfriend goes on the news and says he forgives her and will still marry her. Geez... you'd think he'd get the hint..

We all know the courtship initiation dance. You notice each other. You make excuses to accidentally bump into each other. Women spend hours selecting the right outfit, doing hair and make-up, all in preparation for that critical accidental meeting. He suggests coffee, which comes out of his mouth as, "Uh... you wanna have coffee sometime?" But which registers in a woman's mind as, "GAME ON!!!"

But something we never quite get organized is an exit strategy. We always hope we won't need one, but usually we do. It always amazes me how long our body and mind gives us hints before our soul believes it.

The honeymoon phase, the first three months, feels so great we are addicted for life to try to get that feeling back. We all know the honeymoon phase will end and we all hope that the residual feelings will be good enough to continue to float the relationship. Sometimes they are and we can grow that into love and marriage.

Usually, the residual feelings aren't good enough to keep us going, but it takes us a while to realize it. I don't know what men notice, but women start to notice small things first. One day, all of a sudden, the smell of stale beer being poured out in the sink disgusts you. Dumping out full ashtrays angers you. The sound of multiple belts slapping against his closet door and waking you in the morning sounds like a freight train roaring by the bed. His dragon breath morning kiss which was tolerable and almost endearing two months ago is now so awful you'll get up before him and make coffee.

Little resentments add up, but you keep excusing them away until the three deadly signs show up. The three signs sent by the woman's brain tell her soul, "Do what you want, but we are outta here!" First, you start to avoid his calls and you feel annoyed that he's calling again. Second, you can't deny that you feel relieved to be alone, either in his place or yours. When he finally leaves the house, you feel a wave of pressure release. Now, women can ignore these two final warnings for a little while, but then the third and final 'killer diller' happens... you get that deep internal shudder of repulsion with its dash of nausea, through your whole body when he kisses you. You can have sex and escape it, but somehow an intimate kiss is such a direct connect you couldn't fake it anymore even if you wanted to. The first time it happens, you know in that instant it's over and ain't nuthin' to do about it. So now, you have to find the exit...

Terminating a relationship is like taking a Band-Aid off his hairy arm. You can do it fast or slow. Either way, it's going to hurt.

Some women take what I call the Path of the Bitch. This is when you turn into a bad girlfriend to drive him away. It always works, but it can take months to drive off a guy because you're still sleeping with him and cooking for him because you feel guilty about wanting to leave. Men will tolerate anything if they're getting sex and food. The Path of the Bitch ends when you stop giving him food and sex at which point he says, "Is something wrong?" By now, all your feelings for him are gone and you just pack and run.

Then there's the Path of the Nice Girl. This is when you kindly enumerate for him all the reasons why things aren't working out. He swears to change and you agree to stay in the relationship while he changes. Meanwhile, you expose him to every female you can in the hope he will leave you for her. Of course he's still getting food and sex, so you can be sure nothing will change. Nice Girls often slide out of one relationship by starting another, even with a less desirable guy.

Ultimately, there's the Path of Paul. You see, Paul Simon said it best in his song, "There Must Be Fifty Ways to Leave Your Lover." Download this song, write down all the methods listed. Any one of them is perfect! "Just slip out the back, Jack. Make a new plan, Stan. ... Hop on the bus, Gus. You don't need to discuss much... Just drop off the key, Lee... and get yourself free...."

Gone, for a reported $9.5 million, is her 2.5 acre oceanfront property off Lily Pond Lane to Donald and Bonnie Maharam of Palm Beach. On the property is an architectural gem, a 2.300 square foot private home built by the well known Manhattan architect Gordon Bunshaft in the early 1960s, the only residence in his vast portfolio. The house had been purchased by Stewart from the prior owner, the Museum of Modern Art back in 1995 for about $3.2 million, but it has been vacant for years and has fallen into a ruin. The new owners plan to tear it down and will build a new home on the same footprint, attempting to keep the "spirit" of the old.

Another architectural gem from that era, the twin diamond shaped oceanfront "pods" designed by architect Andrew Geller as the Pearlroth Cottage, is to be removed from its site on the beach in Westhampton Beach to make way for a larger structure. It is owned now by the grandson of the original owners. Jonathan Pearlroth and his wife Holly are giving the structure to the son of Andrew Geller in the hopes that he can find the funds to move it to a new site a half mile down the beach to the west where the town has agreed to make it into a museum for mid-century modern design. The cost to move this minimalist structure; a minimalist $50,000.

Short, Feature-length And Documentary Films Coming To Icehouse Gallery and Screening Room

A scene from The Virile Man, part of this weekend's lineup

Michael Koldan and Elizabeth Cameron in Who's Your Daddy?

The Icehouse Gallery and Screening Room, located in downtown Greenport, is an independently owned and operated venue committed to bringing short and feature-length, documentary and independent films to the North Fork. Films selected are not readily available to the public in the arena of mass media, and with the increasing need for sensationalism in Hollywood, it is getting more and more difficult to find commercial films with significant value.

This festival is dedicated to screening independent films that stand apart in this aspect, and a primary endeavor of Icehouse is a filmmaking program for children at risk in the Southold Town area. This program will be comprised of adolescents between the ages of 9-18 and will encompass all aspects of filmmaking from conception through completion. To be included in this program will be workshops, lectures and hands-on work with professionals. Eventually, the Icehouse plans to extend the target population to include the entire North Fork and, in time, the East End. The goal is to enable the at-risk youth of our communities to express themselves through a medium with which they are comfortable and familiar: film.

Admission for films ranges from $10 to $20 and will benefit "Filmmakers Without Borders," a filmmaking school for underprivileged children. All screenings will be accompanied by director Q&A and/or live performance. The screening room is located at 414 First Street in Greenport. Call 631-445-1459.

Below is the summer schedule (with some descriptions) of the festival films being screened at Icehouse. All begin at 8 p.m. Call the number above for the continuing fall lineup. In addition, there are special events planned throughout the summer at such venues as Vail-Leavitt Music Hall and Castello di Borghese Vineyards, which are sponsored by Peconic Landing. For further information visit .

Comedy Shorts Program (May 14): The Virile Man, Who's Your Daddy? Wrigley, Gay By Dawn (in the deep, dark woods, four rednecks tell ghost stories around an open fire. But when one tells a tale about the horrors that may lurk around them, fear becomes suspicion. Will they make it out in time? Or will the very woods around them turn... Gay by Dawn?), Perils in Nude Modeling, Fluent Dysphasia, and Gretchen and the Night Danger.

One of Many (May 28) A moving documentary that tells the story of a group of Canadian Indians who, in the 1960s, became part of a government operation to systematically take small Indian children away from their homes and families and integrate them into White Christian society.

Unknown Soldier (June 4) Ellison, known as L, is a smart, carefree eighteen-year-old who has been brought up by his proud and loving father, Sam, since the death of his mother when he was five. But when tragedy strikes, L's life changes drastically. He is an Unknown Soldier on a cold and unforgiving battlefield – the streets of Harlem.

Shorts Animation (June 25): Bid Them In (a young woman's humanity is cruelly rejected as she is placed on the auction block of a small Southern town in pre-Civil War America), Childhood Trauma #17, Coffee (a man is forced to deal with his insecurities when he sees God's face in his coffee), Pink and Pong, Poor God, Ryan (an animated tribute to Canadian animator Ryan Larkin), Get In The Car (a family car trip. It's supposed to be a holiday. We've all been thereÖ), This is Not An End.

Shorts International (July 2): Shock and Awe (An Iraqi family's dinner is interrupted during the US's "shock and awe" bombing of Baghdad), Flavio, Sangam, Victoria Para Chino (in 2003 a refrigerated truck carrying more than eighty undocumented immigrants from the Mexican border drove into the heartland of Texas, where a deadly combination of heat and overcrowding led to tragedy), American Made, Snowblink.

Seeds (July 16) A full-length documentary on Seeds of Peace about ten extraordinary teenagers attending the Seeds of Peace International Camp during the summer of 2002.

Touch of Greatness (August 13) You won't find ten-year old children reciting Shakespeare soliloquies, acting out the Cuban Missile Crisis or performing Sophocles plays in most American classrooms today. But Albert Cullum's elementary school students did all this and more.

Shorts Documentaries (August 27): Belle (a subversive fable of old age and beauty), The Critical Path (faced with personal tragedy early in his life, R. Buckminster Fuller came within moments of committing suicide in the Michigan River), Twins, The Tank Man, The Old Man and Hemingway (at the age of 102, Hemingway's boat captain, Gregorio Fuentes, looks back at his friendship with Hemingway).

9-11-01 (September 10) Nominated for several international awards, this film takes us to the perspectives of 11 well-known directors from around the world who have each created a short film describing the accounts of September 11.

OVER THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

Two Firsts and a New Old Favorite from Raphael

Located on sixty gently sloping acres in Peconic, Raphael is best known among North Fork wine trail junkies for its magnificent tasting room. Overflowing with Mediterranean style and offering spectacular views of the vineyard, the popularity of the facility is easy to understand.

Behind this aesthetic splendor, I've always found the tasting room staff friendly and the wines good. The focus is Merlot, but I've always liked the RosÈ and Sauvignon Blanc.

In fact, Raphael's Sauvignon Blanc was one of the first white wines I fell for when I first moved to Long Island six years ago. Richard Olsen-Harbich, managing director and winemaker at Raphael, describes North Fork Sauvignon Blanc as "Öliterally a hybrid between New Zealand and Graves (Bordeaux). This style is driven by intense citrus fruit – lemon and grapefruit – with faint grassy overtures. It is neither as fruity and tropical as NZ nor as austere and earthy as Graves. The North Fork Sauvignon Blanc is absolutely the perfect wine for local seafood."

While the Raphael Sauvignon Blanc 2004 ($20) doesn't display the mouth-puckering, aggressive acidity found in some Sauvignon Blanc (or even previous Raphael vintages), it is crisp, fresh and filled with kiwi and grapefruit and a little mineral character. It's hard to argue that this wine was made for Long Island's seafood bounty. You should open this ten to fifteen minutes before drinking to let a slight sulphur smell subside. Sulphur is used to prevent oxidation, don't let it scare you.

If you're one of the people that complain that Long Island wines aren't good values (I disagree, but that's an argument for another column), I challenge you not to like Raphael Estate Merlot 2002 ($12). The first second-label Merlot from Raphael, it's made with fruit from younger vines, but is super soft, with substantial blackberry and black cherry flavors with hints of spice and toasty vanilla. Olsen-Harbich echoes my challenge saying," this wine is made using the same artisanal techniques as our First label Merlot – hand harvesting, sorting, gravity flow, basket pressing, etc. At this price range, made under these techniques at this level of production (600 cases) I'll put this wine up against anything from anywhere. And, for those critics of Long Island's price/quality ratioÖthis wine's for you."

He has the wine to back up such a statement. This is a great value that would make a great "house red."

If you find Long Island Cabernet Franc to be inconsistent from year to year and producer to producer (I know I do), you owe it to yourself to try the Raphael Cabernet Franc 2001 ($40). From the ballyhooed 2001 vintage, it's the first release of labeled Cabernet Franc from Raphael (it usually ends up in their La Fontana blend or Bel Rosso). Spicy and peppery, this dense, black cherry-rich red is intense but refined. It features full, chewy tannins and a lingering finish that's nearly addictive.

Raphael is committed to making this wine only in the best growing years, so Olsen-Harbich says "unfortunately this (wine) is something I don't think we can do very often – once every ten years would be a good guess." They only made 50 cases, but this is what Long Island Cabernet Franc can be. I can only hope I don't have to wait another ten years for the next one.

BREAKING NEWS

After years of speculation that the Galluccio Family Winery is on the auction block, it has finally been made official. For Sale: lovely Cutchogue vineyard with two tasting rooms and two barns, over 60 acres planted to Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon and Cab Franc, all on 83 acres, 50 of which have development rights intact. The listing agent is Syma Gerard of Syma Joffe Gerard Associates. The price? $8,975,000.

According to Ms. Gerard, contacted by phone for this story, the property is priced based on the value of the land and the buildings alone. It is, she maintains, in line with the current market.

International businessman Vince Galluccio, whose charismatic image is instantly recognizable to many as a result of the phenomenal ad campaign he launched shortly after buying the vineyard in 2000, is planning to retire from the wine business. Along with his wife Judy, he plans to spend more time abroad in Italy, where their recently married daughter is now living. The Galluccios purchased the property from Jerry Gristina, one of the pioneers in the Long Island wine movement.

Since the development rights are intact on 50 acres of the property, development of that portion is a potential draw to buyers. But Ms. Gerard hopes that the buyer will consider a "conservation easement," a practice that Southold Town recently adopted that preserves at least 75 percent of the land.

"A buyer who wants to possibly create a few estate-sized homes and keep the rest of the property a working vineyard is what I dream of," said the listing broker, who has a reputation for being pro conservation, having successfully brokered many deals with farmers and land investors to conserve as much open space as possible.

Dreamers with deep pockets and a passion for wine should contact Ms. Gerard at 631-325-8201.

The Hitchhiker's Guide To The Galaxy

There was a time maybe a millennium-or-so-ago, when the radio was a prime source of adventure, drama, comedy, and even music. Those earfuls could go on to fill books, records, and propelled into the future – television! Imagine those backward British folks who have clung to radio (bless 'em) and were propelled into the future in 1978 when The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy was broadcast on BBC radio. Compellingly entertaining, it soon blossomed into ongoing radio shows, a novel (and then four more), record albums, and a television series. Don't look away yet. Then came comic strips, a theatre play and a computer game. Don't let up! Now we have a movie. It's been a long time coming, for sure; however, you don't have to be a tradition-clinging Brit' to enjoy the irony of a somewhat dated look into the future. It's a travel book with less than practical information about the universe. With his tongue poking clearly through his cheek, The Guide's creator, Douglas Adams (who passed away in 2001 of a heart attack at age 79), has cheerfully projected his tea-sipping, not too intrepid hero into an intergalactic tour that would give Mario Perillo nightmares. It is no five-day pasta and sight-seeing bus visit to Rome and Naples.

Arthur Dent, the hero, portrayed by Martin Freeman of BBC-TV's The Office, instead hitches rides on spaceships accompanied by an alien played by Mos Def. He also has with him the GuideBook loaned to him by E. T. Def. Its first bit of info is: Don't Panic. This is easy for Freeman's Dent since Dent barely noticed the Earth's demise. Saved by the alien Def, when the world came to an end, Dent, being your average laid-back Brit, took it coolly, almost coldly. Meeting chubby li'l piggly-wiggly Vagons, a pork-pie-faced race of not nice creatures, barely prepares Dent for a schoolgirl with a coupl'a Asian looking heads on five bodies and knobby knees, Still, he doesn't freak out. After all, the freaks he encounters are all so benign. Even the Vagons, those villainous, pushed-in snouted louts' only real horror is their gosh awful poetry.

It is to the distinct advantage of this merry tale that Dent's adventures do not require a plot. Riffing (it seems to me) on the hodge-podge, continuing Star Wars movie-after-movie devices, the author of all these novels described them as: A trilogy in five parts. And, so, sequences follow and move ahead as atmospherically as some of the planets' fuzziness. Dent and his alien tourguide are soon joined by Trillian, a free-wheeling Earth Girl encapsulated by Zooey Deschanel and the little guy with the big name, Zaphod Beeblebrox, done with cornpone zeal by Sam Rockwell. As hilarious as Rockwell is (Did I detect some George W. Bush in his enacting of the President of the Galaxy?) his voluptuous carrying-on can't hold a candle to the inflammatory curtain burning by John Malkovitch. He's acting more and more as if the seat of his pants is on fire. He doesn't match the cool of the low-spirited robot, Marvin, beautifully voiced by Alan Rickman. Take note that the voice of Deep Thought (I luv it) is done by Helen Mirren.

The smooth pleasures of these totally breezy adventures is a tonic. Taking this pleasure trip is so easy. You don't need a passport or any shots. I guess popcorn will go all right with the film's singing dolphins, but try not to crunch so loudly that you miss the ambling conversations bantered over the Cineplex's audio system – they'll carry you to really nice faraway places. There's happily not much friction in The Hitchhiker's science fiction.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

preview: the comedy club at bay street...

Did you hear the joke about the "blonde journalist" who is consistently late for numerous events, brings a notebook with no pen and a camera with no film? I know she's blonde by way of chemicals, but I had no idea she was a journalist. I guess anyone can be a writer these days.

#1 Rule in comedy – if you can't laugh at yourself, nobody else will. We're entertained by comedians through movies, TV shows and stand-up. This past Saturday evening, comedian Colin Quinn kicked off the first in a series of stand-up acts at the Bay Street Theatre.

It was a full house and the laughs were heard loudly with almost every joke. Every comedian has to deliver each joke or story telling with precise timing or they're doomed. That is, with the exception of those physical high-strung performers like Robin Williams and of course Jim Carrey. When they feel a weak moment, they jump into "how can I make myself look like a fool so that the laughs will keep coming" mode. It works for me, and millions of other fans.

I think that comedy is one of the hardest things to relay to an audience, but for comedians such as Colin Quinn, it comes naturally. This Brooklyn-born comedian has a unique style of his own. From his time on Saturday Night Live (1998-2000), when he played the anchor on "Weekend Update" to hosting Tough Crowd with Colin Quinn on Comedy Central, in addition to many film and TV writing and performing credits, Colin has made his mark.

Stand up comedians must create material based on every bit of news in the papers, on TV and in the gossip columns to connect with their audience. Colin touched upon the war, reality TV shows and "family and friends" for his act. "There's something wrong when women are boxing and men are getting waxed. We're coming home from work and watching shows (reality shows) that entertain us with situations we just went through that same day at our jobs. Maybe there's a better way they handle it," he joked. I may not have gotten every detail accurately, but the bottom line is, he made me laugh and, like many Americans today, I need a bit of comic relief.

Susie Essman

Robert Klein

The line up continues on Monday, June 20th with Robert Klein, who has performed for many years to sold-out audiences. His career was launched after Klein graduated Yale Drama School and he became a member of Chicago's "Second City" for a year. His next big break happened when producer Mike Nichols selected him to join the Broadway musical, "Apple Tree." He released "Child of the Fifties" in 1973 (which consisted of a collection of material) and he received a Grammy nomination for Best Comedy Album of the Year. Following, he had a sold-out show at Carnegie Hall and made two more albums that were highly acclaimed as well. Klein has a lengthy biography that covers many other stand up, TV, Broadway and film credits. He even performed at the White House. Don't miss the opportunity to see this great talent.

Jeffrey Ross will perform on June 27th, Susie Essman, July 18th, Paula Poundstone on July 25th, Richard Jeni, August 15th, Tom Papa, August 22nd and Lewis Black, August 29th. All performances start at 8 p.m. and tickets are $38.

To laugh is to live. Without comedy and people who make us laugh, the world would be a very boring place.

Highlights at Stephen Talkhouse

You walk into Amagansett's Stephen Talkhouse and think you may be in the wrong place. The dark corners, Christmas lights, and warm smell of old beer puts off a different vibe than you had expected. You realize this isn't your "normal" Hamptons gin joint. It's intimate, eclectic and entirely unto its own. Those in their loafers might just turn around at the door, jump in their zippy convertibles and head back to the world of bottle service and Veuve Clicquot, leaving everyone else to enjoy the show in the relaxed, laid back [illegible]. That's the thing about the Talkhouse, it's just a bar with a stage . . . that just so happens to pull in some truly top-notch acts.

The Stephen Talkhouse originally opened in 1970 as a local watering hole where folks gathered for a few drinks. But in 1987, the bar changed hands and evolved into the establishment it is today. When taprooms and restaurants across the South Fork were being bought up and converted into five star restaurants, The Talkhouse decided to maintain its unpretentious atmosphere, expand its stage, and stock live music.

The tradition has grown over the past eighteen years, and now Stephen Talkhouse boasts some of the top acts east of Manhattan. Here are a few highlights of this summer's sessions.

All dates are subject to change and cancellation; visit www.stephentalkhouse.com for the entire summer schedule.

Toots and The Maytals – June 1

The man that made reggae, reggae. With songs like "Pressure Drop," "True Love is Hard to Find," and "5446," the show should not be missed.

Mac McAnally – June 16

Loudon Wainwright III – July 2

This legendary contemporary folk singer/songwriter is still continuing his legend with an extraordinary career spanning three decades and over 20 albums of unforgettable musical madness, mayhem and god-like genius.

theatre review: glengarry glen ross...by gordin & christiano

The revival of David Mamet's Glengarry Glen Ross, which won the 1984 Pulitzer Prize for drama, boasts a dazzling ensemble of seven actors, crackling dialogue, and solid direction by Joe Mantello. More than 20 years after it first appeared on Broadway, well- known to many because of the 1992 film that featured memorable portrayals by Jack Lemmon, Al Pacino, and Alec Baldwin (in a role written for the movie), the morality story about sleazy real estate dealings still packs a wallop.

Alan Alda and Liev Schreiber

The rather slim tale, told in two brief acts, is essentially a character study of the aggressive alpha male in the throes of competition. Five Chicago real estate agents compete for a new Cadillac Seville by selling Florida properties of questionable value. The script, which pays homage to Arthur Miller's Willy Loman from Death of a Salesman, and features Mamet's unique language, could be viewed by many to be dated because of its lack of cell phones and computers. The new technology has only made today's counterparts to these sleazy salesmen quicker on the draw and possibly more devious. Unfortunately, the tactics employed by the men here have not changed all that much. So, the play also becomes a comment on today's real estate practices that are hidden beneath shiny packaging, slick images and glossy advertising, not unlike that of Glengarry Glen Ross' top salesman Tony Roma, in a brilliant characterization by Liev Schreiber.

The first act takes place at two separate tables in a Chinese Restaurant. Within the context of three brief, two-character scenes we meet six of the play's seven characters: the four salesmen, their cool boss John Williamson (Frederick Weller) and a naive prospect, James Lingk (Tom Wopat). In the first scene we learn the value of the coveted leads, as the down-on-his-luck-Shelly Levene, the Willy Loman-like character (Alan Alda), begs the detached young boss for a couple of these prospects so he might reclaim his once lofty position. The next scene introduces us to conniving Dave Moss (Gordon Clapp) as he tries to convince a dense George Aaronow (Jeffrey Tambor) to join him in a scheme to break into the real estate office and steal the leads so they might sell them to a rival. In the final scene we get to see dapper Tony Roma in action closing a deal with the inexperienced James Lingk.

The disheveled office that has been broken into is the second act scene where all the characters come together amidst an investigation by detective Baylen (Jordan Lage), who is attempting to solve the crime. Set designer Santo Loquasto amusingly evokes the cheapness of a run down real estate office of yesteryear. Today's office would be as image conscious as Tony Roma with his slicked back hair, perfectly tailored suits, French cuffed shirts, and shiny shoes.

Schreiber's Roma commands the act with a finely crafted, layered performance that is absolutely dazzling as he coaches his fellow colleague with "Always tell the truth.....it's the easiest to remember. However, when confronted with a buyer who wants to cancel a deal, does everything but. All the actors are wonderful and the ensemble has been given a special Drama Desk Award as a tribute to their excellence. Mr. Schreiber, however, is a standout, delivering a performance of power and depth. Look for him at Tony Award time.

Director Joe Mantello puts the actors through their crisp paces with an astute sense of the play's rhythms, giving a special emphasis to the male camaraderie at the heart of the story about the ruthless salesmen, who will do just about anything to be successful. The first act drags somewhat due to the lack of movement since the characters are seated at tables, but sets us up for the powerful second act. Some of the poignancy is lost at the play's end as Alan Alda's otherwise flawless performance lacks the desperation necessary to be ultimately heartbreaking. Otherwise, this is an impeccable production that is not only illuminating, but audaciously entertaining.

Glengarry Glenn Ross opened at the Royal Theatre, 242 West 45th Street between Broadway and Eighth Avenue, on May 1, 2005. For tickets call 212-239-6200 or at the box office.

THE DAIN CURSE

There's a ton to be said of smart, earth-shatteringly heavy books or films, but sometimes, to cast off the weights of the day, there's nothing like a light nerve-tingling, juicy murder or two or three. So, Saturday May 14 at 2 p.m., Dan's Papers "They Made The Movie Here" FREE Film Festival plunges the audiences into novel murders, both mysterious and smart. For added mystery, the event takes place in the dark. For added smartness, it takes place in Ross School's Lecture Hall on Goodfriend Drive, off Rt. 114. Its screen will light up with swanky melodrama – a pulpy who dunnit from Dashiell Hammett's first novel, The Dain Curse.

Before Hammett's legendary private detectives, Sam Spade of The Maltese Falcon and Nick Charles of The Thin Man, there was Hamilton Nash, The Dain Curse's private investigator who is most closely patterned after Hammett's own background and identity. With a stroke of brilliance, the film's producer, Martin Poll, has cast James Coburn as the private dick with a sharp eye and dulled optimism. When asked if innocent people were hurt, he responds, "There are no innocent people." Isn't Coburn enough of a reason to see this movie? As Ham Nash, he not only acts the part perfectly, he looks the part – just like Hammett, with the trim full moustache and raked fedora with the flourished brim. His wardrobe is impeccably reproduced, as are all the details in the film, utilizing the nostalgic pizzazz of the 30s prohibition era. The movie takes a steep turn-around from the sultry and somber film noir look the crime novel inspired. Instead, The Dain Curse film adaptation is bright, colorful and peaked with high-gloss cars, clothing, cigarette holders and faddish cults. All of this is shot as I like it – on locations in New York City, Pennsylvania and our lengthy picturesque, Long Island.

In this first novel Dashiell Hammett created the pattern of the hard-nosed private eye, whose callused heart goes out to a very young, spoiled woman in deep trouble because of her naïve openness. This pulls him into a series of bruising confrontations with gangsters, weirdoes, nettled relatives and well-meaning friends. The prototype served as a model and standard for writers like Raymond Chandler who went on to embellish and expand the genre.

At the film's opening James Coburn, as Nash, is seen walking briskly in Manhattan, on a sunny autumn morning. He narrates, voice over, "I was working all night on a two-bit case that turned into something bigger. You see, I was trying to find out where a big shot bootlegger had an underage, runaway girl under wraps at a rumrunner's warehouse. There was a shootout. The big shot got a bullet in the arm but I got the girl. At $12.50 a day, how was I to know the big shot bootlegger, who played house with an underage girl, was also a member of the vice commission. City Hall made him a knight in shining armor and my name was mud again." Nash works for the Dickerson National Agency (Hammett worked at Pinkertons) and his local boss, played by veteran actor Paul Stewart commiserates. He tells City Hall Nash has been sent to Toledo, but quickly assigns him to a diamond heist from a wealthy family. There he meets the "quirky" young girl that will set his adventures into motion. She is nude under sun lamps. She smiles strangely, and here we go! Who "stole" the diamonds? Who staged her father's death and is her mother unbalanced mentally? Are her mother and she, as descendents of the Dain Family, to be plagued by the Curse that strikes the women of the family? Nash doggedly persists. Every time the girl's problems seem over, he hangs in and sure enough, wham! Another violent murder.

A coloratura cast is neat enough. Nancy Addison is the hazed and hazy girl. Jason Miller is a vastly prissy writer and family friend. Jean Simmons is a gorgeous Cult administrator. Hector Elizondo is a Long Island sheriff in riding breeches and, happily, there is the oh-so-photogenic Island itself.

I look forward to enjoying the stylish carryings-on with you. I am your host, Guy de Fraumeni and Sarah Halsey will assist, with hearty refreshments.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

MAX ERNST, ERIC FISCHL AND LINDA STEIN IN NEW YORK

What do such disparate artists Max Ernst, Eric Fischl and Linda Stein have in common? First is their diverse connection to our local area. Second is their depiction of the figure.

A case in point: Max Ernst's son, artist Jimmy Ernst, and grandson artist/critic, Eric Ernst, have had a long association with the Hamptons. More relevant for purposes here, however, is Max Ernst's outstanding exhibit currently at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. While his retrospective includes a wide range of subject matter and styles, his use of the figures seems like a good starting point for review.

Ernst's sculptures are ones this critic finds most compelling. Some shapes remind us of those created by his grandson Eric, although comparisons may not be appropriate here. Two particular images serve as examples of Max Ernst's figurative perspective.

His "Moon Mad" (1944) relies both on contemporary design and his own idiosyncratic imagination. It is somehow formally classic, with its rounded, archetypical forms, and delightfully unique. A painting that captures the grotesque features of a man, staying in our mind long after seeing the exhibition, having conveyed the agonies of war.

Eric Fischl's figures displayed at Mary Boone Gallery in Chelsea allow us to see the work he discussed last year at a Parrish Museum lecture. They are his most manipulated pieces, using the interactions of two actors whose poses are caught in tableau form.

Work by Max Ernst

Again, Mr. Fischl's signature demeanor shines through: a narrative, Postmodern snapshot of one act caught (or "frozen") in time and place. The question remains: are the actions of the nude man and woman captured before, during or after a signifying moment? This one element marks the artist's sense of flux and "play."

Despite the varied poses of play, there are other discerning motifs that run through the pieces, including a bottle of water, similar decor, and reflections of sun streaming through the windows.

Moreover, sometimes part of the male's or female's body is "cut off" from the visual plane. We can determine that perhaps Mr. Fischl is fragmenting the figures to show the cessation of play and disconnection from each other.

There are other dynamics at work, of course, particularly the power play between the man and woman: one work has the female standing and leaning away from her partner. Other times, the woman is not equal to the male but seems like a servant.

Finally, local resident Linda Stein's sculpture in the "Broadway Windows" display presents another figurative view. This time we must identify the figure, although Ms. Stein's configurations strongly suggest knights' bodies. Moreover, we must also imagine their "heads," an appropriate process considering that the pieces are in storefront windows.

Such a presentation is not only one of reflection, but also one of illusion. In fact, this illusion is a most pertinent element: seeing what might not be there. We know that the reflections of passersby are only temporary images. Thus, the sculptures seem like "ghosts" as well where a penchant for the past connects to the present SoHo scene.

Mr. Ernst's exhibition is currently at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Mr. Fischl's work can be seen by request at Mary Boone's; Ms. Stein's sculptures are at Broadway and East l0th Street.

HONORING THE ARTIST: Sally Swatland

This week's cover artist, Sally Swatland, has an enduring love of the beach. Growing up in Greenwich, CT, she spent many blissful childhood days in the sunshine and on the sand, prancing with a pail in hand and minnows at her toes. It is this feeling of freedom and lightheartedness that she captures in her paintings.

"Summer on Plum Island" is a painting of Ms. Swatland's daughter Katie, at age seven or eight. She is now twenty-two years old. That gives us a hint as to how long Swatland has been painting – if fact, it has been "all her life." Her creative family fostered her love of the arts, and in her early adulthood, she studied at the famed Art Student's League in NYC. Painting was her passion.

While moving through different phases of instruction, techniques and subject matter, Ms. Swatland found her oeuvre in portraits of children engaged in a range of activities at the beach. Sometimes in groups, sometime solitary, but always peaceful and contented, the children in her paintings echo a seemingly bygone era of innocence and serenity. Nostalgia comes to mind, even though the scenes are contemporary.

Typically, Ms. Swatland will snap a photograph of children at play, focused and intensely involved in the glory of their day. Later in her studio, she will paint from that image the composition of the figure, the starting point for her finished work. But the setting comes from memory.

"I've spent a great deal of time at the beach, in Connecticut, California and other places on my travels. For the last four years, we've been coming to the beach in Westhampton. I think the Hamptons beaches are the most beautiful I've seen."

Ms. Swatland goes on to explain, "I study the beaches carefully, the differences in the landscapes and the weather and the colors. Then, I paint those backgrounds."

Her particular favorite day at the beach? "The windy days, when the surf kicks up. Those are the best."

Ms. Swatland has exhibited with a number of national organizations, including Oil Painters of America, the Hudson Valley Art Association and the American Society of Marine Artists. She has also won awards at juried shows, most recently, Second Prize in Oil at the 2004 New England Exhibition.

These days, Ms. Swatland has been painting more plein air and less in the studio – at the very least, her studies are completed outside. Any excuse for a day at the beach. –Robin F. Smith

Away At School... By David Lion Rattiner

The Curse?

No one seems to be willing to admit it, but the curse that plagued the Boston Red Sox for eighty-six years seems to have found a new home at the Yankee clubhouse. As of today, the Yanks are in last place and can't seem to quite figure out what the hell is going on with the team that has dominated baseball ever since the game has been invented. As an avid Yankee fan and a bred and born New Yorker, I have always grown up believing that the Yankees kick the Red Sox's butt year after year because we simply have a better team. The concept of a curse was simple superstition invented by a pathetic bunch of losers from Boston who can't seem to wake up in the morning and shave their grisly, Red Sox faces. Nope, the winning Yankee team had to do with simple factual, time tested strategy and poise. It was good coaching, paying for top players, top management and pure talent that would bring victory every year.

Now, however, I find myself believing in the invisible curse in the sky, because as of right now, the Yanks are in last place, shelling out one of the biggest payrolls in the history of the sport, and I am not so certain that something called a curse is a myth. No, now I believe that it is pure hard fact that needs to be handled in a strategic and head on fashion. Will someone do an Indian dance, please? What the hell is going on?

The cool, clean cut Jeter, the monstrous A-Rod, and the kamikaze Matsui are all looking like they have no idea what the hell is going on out there either. A-Rod is striking out all the time now. He doesn't even look phased when it happens. He just takes off his helmet and walks back into the dugout. A-Rod, one of the highest paid players in baseball, is barely touching .300. Now, I know what most of you Yankee fans are saying out there. Oh, well none of this matters, this is just the beginning of the season, this isn't the real baseball. The Yanks will work out their bugs.

I completely disagree with this. The beginning of the season DOES matter. Everyone, including Steinbrenner, is holding their breath and hoping that the fans will buy that load of crap one more time, time that will eventually run out. The Yankees need to take this early, dfl (dead, !@#$#, last) as a sign that they need to stop ignoring the fact that the curse is on them and they need to get rid of it.

If there is one thing that New York City has, it is a large group of people that know how to lift curses. Steinbrenner needs to get the top one in the world, no, in the top ten, for that matter, and get them down to the club house and get to work. We should have chants before every game until they start winning again and the curse is lifted. We need to cast spells, get Harry Potter down there, and get some witches, for God's sake. We can't mess around with this; I'm not going to go through an entire generation rooting for the losing team.

It took a lot for me to believe in a curse, but the absolute solidifier was the fact that Steinbrenner owned a horse in this year's Kentucky Derby named Bellamy Road, also the favorite to win the race. Millions of dollars were placed on the bet that Bellamy Road would come charging across the finish line and win. There was no reason for this not to happen. After all, Bellamy Road is a fast horse, known to win by fifteen lengths ahead of other horses, but the betting men and women this year forgot to think about the curse that Steinbrenner now carries with him.

In an eerie Kentucky Derby conclusion, an underdog horse, Giacomo, somehow managed to win one of the most competitive horse races in the world. This was a horse that was a fifty-to-one long shot, according to the bookies, a horse that beat all the odds working against him. Kind of like last year's Red Sox, wouldn't you say?

To make things even spookier, Steinbrenner's horse came in seventh. That's right, seventh. As in, seven games for the pennant, as in seven games for the World Series, as in seven days in a week that the curse is on the Yankees, as in seven sins, as in lucky or shall I say unlucky number seven as in.....well.....you get the idea.

For the love of God, get a witch, a psychic, and a wizard up to the Bronx, and I mean now.

When In Manhattan... BY Oliver Peterson

Punk Rock Chocolate

At one time in my life, the punk rocker within me was manifested on my exterior self. My years living in the Lower East Side and the East Village were coated in multicolored hair dye, Mohawks, spiked leather, and dog collars. I worshipped the Sex Pistols, the Ramones, and Iggy Pop, among many others. Unfortunately, or maybe by the grace of God, my Sid Vicious lifestyle landed me in this blessed place, but my love for Downtown and the music that goes with it will never die. It's where it all began. There were some great clubs, like Coney Island High and Max's Kansas City, but the best known and the one credited for being the birthplace of some of the greatest bands and the punk and underground music scenes is none other than CBGB. Favorites like Blondie, the Ramones, Patti Smith, and the Talking Heads were all reared on the CB's stage.

In 1973, in the East Village on the Bowery, club owner Hilly Krystal opened a bar behind the dirty shutters of a former Hell's Angels hangout. The bar was once only known as a wino, read Bowery Bum, haunt, but Kristal named it the Country Blue Grass Blues and Other Music for Urban Gourmets – or CBGB & OMFUG for short. Obviously CBGB never became famous for the country-style music he intended for it. Instead, the bar became the haven for the loud rock of the burgeoning punk and underground scene in Manhattan. The small space made for great acoustics and made any crowd seem to be a huge frenetic mob. The 70s went by and cemented CB's reputation worldwide as the place for new bands to play and for fans to see them. As the 80s rolled in, many of the bands that sharpened their teeth at the club became huge international successes, and soon a new era of music hit the stage. Avant-garde and experimental groups like Brian Eno and Lydia Lunch began to emerge as another challenge to the ears of listeners. That's always been their style. Other new talent discovered in the 80s who've left their mark to this day are They Might Be Giants, In Living Colour, and punk icons Black Flag. All three bands had their first gigs at CB's. The club remains at the center of New York's music culture scene.

The problem today is that CBGB is fighting to stay afloat in a changing city. Downtown gets more gentrified by the day, and it's only a matter of time before the great cultural institution is bulldozed or converted into another Starbucks. This Monday, May 16th, Chocolate Bar and CBGB are joining together for an event aimed at getting more money and more names onto petitions to "Save CBGB." Come down to the club and the CBGB Gallery, sign the petition and be of the first to taste "The CBGB Collection by Chocolate Bar." In keeping with CBs tradition, five bucks gets you in the door for an "all-chocolate, rock-and-roll experience." Even the band, Chocolate Genius, represents the sweet milky candy.

Chocolate Bar won the 2004 Timeout New York Eat Award for "Best Chocolate Store," and offers cosmopolitan luxury through old-fashioned collections and unique inspirations. The boutique's menu includes authentic New York Egg Creams, great coffee and teas, and tons of interesting chocolate. In collaboration with Hilly Kristal, Chocolate Bar has produced two edible lines of CBGB products including the CBGB Punk Rock Box ($25), a 16-piece truffle collection embossed with the pioneering history and imagery of CBGB's scene. Served in a chocolate brown box, and hot-stamped with the venue's famed logo, it comes complete with a postage-paid petition, a record-shaped biography, steel logo keychain and a collection of CBGB stickers. For thriftier spenders, the CBGB Retro Bars ($3.00 each) come in two flavors, and each is wrapped in a limited edition CBGB keepsake. They weigh 2.25 ounces and also come with a postage-paid petition to save the venerable venue. These chocolate treats should end up being collector's items, and the cause is just.

CBGB is located at 315 Bowery between 1st and 2nd Street on the Lower East Side of Manhattan. CB's 313 Gallery is right next door. The Gallery is open for free display to the public from noon till 7pm. Visit CBGB.com for more. Chocolate Bar is located at 48 Eighth Avenue between Horatio and Jane Streets. Consumers can pre-order CBGB product for delivery anywhere in the U.S. by calling 1.800.481.2462 or by visiting www.chocolate-barnyc.com.

EAST END KID: EMILY TURNS FOUR

By Emily Hart Post
With a little help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

It was just my fourth birthday and as one of my gifts, Mom and Dad gave me a party at the hot new place for parties, Kidville, owned by PR maven Shari Mischer, on the East Side of Manhattan. My friends from school were there, some Hamptons kids, and parents, of course. When the kids came in they wrote their greetings on a giant birthday card, which takes up half a wall at home. Then we played games and met " the pirate" in one room. After that we went into the gym, where we went on all the different attractions and had a hunt for the pirate's treasure. The older kids were better at this game than the four year olds. Then we went in for cake and treats in another room and got some yummy cotton candy. Guess the other moms and dads were not so happy with all those sweet things but hey, it's my birthday party. It was a fun day and I got lots of gifts, especially toys and games – Yea! Birthdays are fun, especially if you're the birthday girl. So why is this kind of fun only once a year? Let's start half-year birthdays too.

Summer season is coming and my column will soon switch to the Hamptons. Hope you'll send me tips on cool places to go to.. my agent/manager/dad: david@nextpert.com

Biodynamic Farming

There is a farm nestled on the side of a mountain, and from certain pineapple groves, you can catch glimpses of the ocean. Passion flowers and banana trees abound, and there is one pond that nearly fills up with egrets every sunset. This farm, located near Playa Dominical in Costa Rica, is called Finca Ipe, and it was my introduction to the world of biodynamics.

Biodynamic farming was created by Rudolf Steiner, who was born in 1861 in Yugoslavia. He introduced biodynamic principles to the world in 1924, and now it is a widespread practice that has been embraced on farms in New Zealand, India, Costa Rica, the United States, and all over the world. During the reign of Nazism in Germany, biodynamics was specifically prohibited, and practices had to go underground. After the end of World War II, they were again permitted to develop in Europe. In the meantime, though, biodynamics had made the leap to Australia and North America.

The basic principles of biodynamics are along the lines of organic farming, but these practices are then taken a step further. In organic farming, all fertilizers and pesticides must be of either plant or animal origin. Nothing should be derived from chemicals. The same is true in biodynamic farming, but also taken into consideration are the life cycles of the moon, sun, and stars. There are times in the lunar cycle, for example, when the earth is more fertile. Therefore, ground preparation, sowing, cultivating, and harvesting should be timed with these variables in mind.

Pineapples grown on the farm

In addition, Steiner presented the ideal that a farm should be self-contained. There should be the right number of animals to produce manure for fertility, and the animals should be fed from the farm. This self-sufficiency should be sustainable. Vegetable waste, manure, food scraps, and leaves contain nutrients that can help a farm or garden to thrive if they are composted. They can build up the vitality of the soil. Thus, composting is integral to biodynamics.

Organic farming inputs are also used on biodynamic farms. Herbal and mineral materials are processed and then applied in small amounts onto soil and crops. One common biodynamic preparation for soil is called "Horn Manure." Any farmer can cultivate this powerful treatment from fresh cow manure. The manure is then placed in a cow horn and buried in soil in autumn. According to biodynamic principles, it should be after the autumnal equinox. It passes the winter underground, and is then retrieved before the spring equinox. A small handful of the manure is to be stirred in a bucket of water for an hour, and then sprinkled in the fields in thick drops. The sprinkling should occur in afternoon or evening. One or two applications of horn manure annually has proven on biodynamic farms around the world to enhance soil fertility.

Biodynamic farming strives to make the most of available space. There is little room for walkways, and beds are often raised four to ten inches high. The beds are dug deeper than in standard farming, reaching a depth of about two feet to give roots space to grow through bone meal, soil ash, and compost. Plants are strategically placed so that, upon maturing, the leaves will just barely touch one another. This tactic makes it more difficult for weeds to thrive and helps to moderate soil temperature and maximize soil retention. When the soil keeps water in for longer, it has time to absorb its nutrients.

John Jeavons is a North American farmer who has

I'd Like to Propose a Toast – But in Which Glass?

Feel free to ignore everything that follows. After all, drinks are about enjoyment, not strictures. Anything can be served in just about anything, and your guests will appreciate it. Having said that, there are different bar glasses for different uses, and each has a name and style believed by our learned forefathers to be the perfect vessel for a particular drink.

Let us begin with the hard stuff. It is most useful to have a shot glass on hand if you make mixed drinks and don't have a bartender's eye for amounts. A shot of hard alcohol (considered equivalent in alcohol content to a 6-ounce glass of wine and a bottle of beer) is 1.5 ounces. So that is the size of a shot glass. I used to think that shot glasses were also used to serve chilled vodka (or tequila shots), but they are really too small to drink from, so vodka bars use slightly larger glasses (probably containing more than one shot).

Anyone who has watched Sex and the City is familiar with the martini glass, that gently tapered cone on a stem, holding a whopping 10 ounces. (Some bars have smaller versions.) Any martini-based drink, from a Cosmopolitan to an espresso martini to a classic martini, is meant to be served in this glass. Hold the glass by the stem, so as not to warm the gin or vodka, which is meant to be well chilled. And bear in mind that a single pure martini contains nearly 9 ounces of alcohol, which is the equivalent of six drinks.

Next comes a trio of all-purpose glasses without stems: the highball (tall and thin, holding 14 ounces), the double old fashioned (shorter and wider, at 12 ounces), and a plain old rocks glass (shorter and not quite as wide, at 8 or 10 ounces). All of these glasses are meant for drinks served on the rocks, as the ice will keep the drink cold even as your hand warms the glass. Typically, more colorful mixed drinks are served in a highball, such as a Tom Collins or Bloody Mary. On the other hand, drinks served plain, on the rocks or with just a splash of water or seltzer, are served in double old fashioned or rocks glasses.

Three specialty glasses should be mentioned: the hurricane glass, the margarita glass and the brandy snifter. All three have stems. The hurricane glass, meant for tropical drinks like piña coladas, is curvy and holds 16 ounces. The margarita glass, meant only for frozen margaritas, has a thin cylinder beneath a large shallow bowl and holds 15 ounces. The brandy snifter is perhaps the most elegant of all bar glasses, with its extra-wide bowl that gently tapers in.

Although the brandy snifter holds either 6 or 9 ounces, it is not meant to be filled; the brandy resides in the wide part of the bowl before it begins tapering up. It is thought that this lovely shape helps concentrate and direct the aromas to your nose.

On to wine. Very serious enthusiasts will tell you that each varietal of wine ought to be served in a particular glass designed with that wine's attributes in mind. While that works for a fine restaurateur, most of us do not have the space or budget to be so particular. For such mere mortals, having just two sets of glasses is quite appropri-

Dress Your House For Success

So, you have decided to sell your house. You have settled on an appropriate price, based on a thorough comparative market analysis. Your realtor has designed a promotional campaign and will shortly begin holding open houses. Before long, potential buyers will visit your home. But before all that happens, you should ask yourself this: have you taken all reasonable steps to ensure that your house will "show well" – and thereby increase the likelihood that you will receive a satisfactory offer? Surprisingly, many people do not bother. Those who do have the advantage. Here are some suggestions.

Clean and straighten up your house. It is difficult for many people to imagine the potential of a house if it is dirty or messy. This may seem obvious, but I can't tell you how many messy houses I have seen. If you do not like cleaning or straightening up, bring in a housekeeper as often as needed while the house is on the market. Make sure that dishes, toiletry items and Junior's toys are put away. Make the beds, and fluff up the pillows. Empty the garbage. Have your windows cleaned. Toss out (or hide) that dusty pile of newspapers you will never get to anyway.

For those few people whose decorating style is based on clutter, consider a temporary re-thinking. For most people, the prior sentence may seem peculiar, but I am here to tell you that I have been to more than one house that made me think, "Are you serious?" I am not talking about differing tastes; no décor will appeal to everyone. What I am talking about is that unique extreme that will appeal to almost no one. For example, I recently visited an otherwise extraordinary mansion in which the many, excessive pieces of furniture were strewn about in a haphazard fashion, and virtually everything in the house was covered with one or more throws. It would not be difficult to move the major furniture into a somewhat more traditional configuration and to store away 90% of the throws while the house is listed. The potential upside could be enormous, as the point is to help potential buyers imagine themselves living in the house.

Lighten/Brighten. People like cheerful, light-filled houses. If your bedrooms or other rooms have any type of curtains, shades or drapes, raise them before open houses or showings. If a room or even the whole house doesn't receive lots of light, be sure to leave lights on all over the house. If you are not in residence and don't want to leave lights running or drapes open, instruct your realtor to get to the house in advance of any showings to make sure the house is as bright as possible. During the winter, have your realtor light a fire in the fireplace before open houses.

By the way, if your house is on the market and you are away all winter, do not turn off the electricity and heat. I know of a house in Sag Harbor that was on the market all winter, and let me tell you: the open houses were brutal. It is hard to get excited about buying a house if you are desperately uncomfortable while inspecting it.

Consider spending money, but only by the 1:3 rule. If you have cleaned, straightened and lightened your house, but you still feel you would like to do more to make it show better, consider investing in minor improvements. The general rule of thumb is that you should devote one dollar towards improving your house only if you reasonably can expect to increase the sale price by three dollars. Let us consider what this means.

If your front door could use a new coat of paint, do it. You want people's first impression to be positive. Likewise, if adding a few perennials to the perimeter of the house or sodding a small lawn will make a meaningful difference, go for it. On the other hand, now is not the time to buy expensive specimen trees or to invest in a major landscaping effort.

At this time of year, you absolutely should open and maintain your pool. A sparkling pool shows infinitely better than a pool cover or, worse, a green, leaf-strewn pool. So many people want to save the expense, but given that one can open and maintain a pool for just a few hundred dollars, that is terribly shortsighted. However, do not install a pool just for the sake of selling the house, unless your house is on the high end of the market (in which case a pool would be expected). The time, aggravation and expense will not be worth your while.

Minor imperfections should be addressed. Does the floor in one room need sanding? Is there a serious scratch or hole in a wall? Are your decks in need of power-blasting? Does one of the faucets sputter? These types of problems make a house look bedraggled. On the other hand, you probably should not have the entire house re-painted, unless the walls are a disaster.

Do not renovate your kitchen or bathrooms unless there is an anomaly in an otherwise high-end house. That is, if your house should sell well into seven figures but, for some reason, you have an old, small refrigerator and a hideous, old bathroom, buy a Sub-Zero and have the bathroom updated. But if your kitchen and bathrooms are appropriate for the house but just not dazzling or perhaps are just not someone else's taste, let the buyer spend the money.

The list of possible improvements is endless – including obtaining permits for tennis courts or a finished basement – but the recommendations above will suit the vast majority of houses. Just a bit of effort and a relatively small investment can yield enormous dividends when your house is on the market. Good luck!

ate, although three or four could be even better. Start with a white wine set and a slightly larger red wine set. Many white wine glasses (often called Chardonnay) are 8-1/2 ounces, although there is a truly broad variety of sizes. Many red wine glasses (often called Burgundy or Zinfandel) are about 13 ounces, although again there are many sizes. It is also a good idea to have champagne flutes on hand. While champagne can be served in a white wine glass, the very thin flute is useful for maintaining the bubbles longer. Finally, a small dessert or liqueur glass is useful if you serve after-dinner drinks and don't want to re-use the white wine glasses.

So, now we get to beer. I am a firm believer in drinking beer from the bottle (but not a can). Somehow it tastes better to me that way. But many people do like to hold a glass, perhaps for the visual effect or to have an easier lip from which to drink. For those, there are two essential choices – the mug or the pilsner glass. The mug has the benefit of a handle, so your hand does not warm the glass. The pilsner glass, with the gentle outward slope, is a bit more elegant.

While you can certainly buy fine crystal for your barware, most on-line stores have fairly inexpensive glasses of all the varieties I have described. All of my glasses receive frequent compliments; they come from Crate and Barrel, which has an enormous variety of affordable styles. Because they were so affordable, I don't worry when one breaks, and I also wash them in the dishwasher.

A final thought: you might consider having a few inexpensive plastic cups for the outdoors. Sometimes practicality must trump elegance. Cheers!

Keep The Ball Rolling

With summer heading our way, most of us will begin planning various parties and barbecues to entertain friends and have a good time in the newly wonderful weather. If you haven't snuck a couple in by now, certainly by Memorial Day the coals will be lit and those red and white tablecloths might find their way to your picnic tables. Along with the good food and company, it's nice to have some games to play. Since Scrabble should be reserved for the winter and cards don't do well in the wind, lawn sports are a great option for bringing a little friendly competition and fun to your backyard.

At my family parties, the games never fail to add a lot of laughing, hooting and hollering to the afternoon. The most convenient and probably most popular game in our clan is Bocce. My mother picked up a nice heavy set of black and red balls at TJ Maxx for a good price a while back, and we've had a blast with it ever since. You can play the game anywhere, and it's easy to learn. The United States Bocce Federation has a detailed schematic for building your own court on their website, but the beauty of the game is the fact that no matter how rough the terrain, you can still play – you don't need a court. I've even seen people play on the beach. Obviously, the sand stopped the rolling of balls, but it became its own game with unique challenges much like your yard might provide.

The official rules state that there should be two teams of four players. Two players from each team will be permanently stationed at each end of the court (or area you've designated for play), throwing two balls each. At the end of each frame, the game continues at the opposite end of the court. Begin the match with the flip of a coin between the captains of each team. The winner of the coin flip may have the first toss of the pallino (small target ball) or choose the color of the balls. The tosser may throw the pallino any distance as long as it passes the center of the court and does not hit the back end. A failed toss relinquishes the pallino to the opposing team to toss. Now, the team who originally threw the pallino gets to roll the first ball. If that ball hits the back end, the team must roll again, otherwise they must step aside and let the other team roll until they have either rolled a ball closer to the pallino or they run out of balls. Whenever a team gets a ball closer, they must step aside and let the other team roll. This continues until both teams are out of balls. Only one team scores in a frame. One point is given for each ball that is closer to the pallino than the closest ball of the opposing team. At the end of any frame, if the closest ball of each team is equidistant from the pallino, no points are awarded and the game resumes from the opposite end of the court, with the same team tossing the pallino. Games are normally played to 13 points, but you can change that number to whatever you like. Sometimes a game can move very slowly and it doesn't hurt to lower the score if you want to be finished in time for burgers.

Part of the fun is knocking opponents' balls away with yours. If you're really good or really competi-

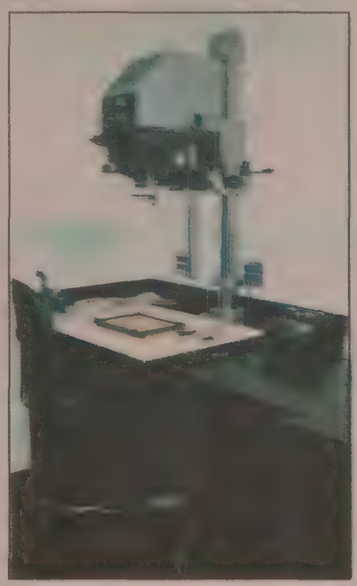
Casting Light on Darkrooms

The digital age has changed everything. Some say that inevitably film cameras will go the way of the dodo, but there are a few who hold strong to the tradition of film, especially black and white. The cost of processing this film seems to be constantly rising and public darkrooms are becoming scarce, so the obvious solution for those who aren't willing to part with their B&W is to build their own darkroom. Sure, you're thinking the construction of a darkroom in your home is an overwhelming job, but it really isn't.



First, in order to create a darkroom, you need to secure a room. In movies, private investigators' baños always double as darkrooms, and with good reason. Bathrooms can easily be made light tight, they have plumbing, are easily cleanable, and usually have some kind of ventilation system. These are four of the major components that go into creating a darkroom.

But there are a few factors to take into account. Developer and other film processing chemicals may have side effects, so using them in an area that is trafficked by the entire family, especially small children, may not be the best option. Thorough cleansing after each use will help minimize the chance, but one can never be too careful.

Ideally, find a place that has plumbing, ventilation, and can be specifically designated as a darkroom. If you can get the permits, a shed is a great place to set up shop. Otherwise, find somewhere else.

Once you've found a room, you'll have to make sure that no light can enter from an outside source. If your room has no windows, you're ahead of the game. And if the room is finished with sheetrock or plaster walls and ceiling, it's even better. If there are windows, using black, heavy-duty gardening plastic works quite well at blocking out the light. It is suggested to use two layers of the plastic just to be sure. Measure out and construct a wooden frame to fit around the windows, then adhere the plastic to the frames with duct tape, sealing it completely. Secure the window frames on the windows and turn off the lights. Wait ten minutes, until your eyes adjust to the darkness, then look for light seams. Make adjustments where needed.

The door to a darkroom can be as simple or as complex as you wish. If on a budget, sealing the door with weather strips, or hanging a black curtain may be your only option. If you've got the money, a revolving, light-sealed door is a fantastic benefit. It allows you to enter and exit the room without allowing light to enter. Another option is setting up two doors separated by a short corridor. The important thing is to prevent any light from getting in, by any means necessary.

If you have the money and the space, installing a prefabricated darkroom may be worth it. Consolidated Door Corporation (www.consoli-

The Invasion Of The Deer

With the deer population at an all time high and commercial and residential developments infringing upon deer territory, deer browsing has become prevalent. Many landscapes provide a wide variety of nutrients which deer seek since they are selective feeders (changing their diet to suit the season).

No matter where you live on the East End, however, deer are not shy about wandering onto your property and helping themselves to a smorgasbord of delights.

Keeping out these uninvited guests is no small task. Before investing time and money, it is a good idea to check with fellow gardeners, farmers and local nurseries. They may be able to provide you with information that would help you in determining what methods work best.

There is a wide range of strategies in the fight between deer and landowners and this should provide a good overview.

Let's begin by looking at some temporary arrangements. Crackling vinyl tape, and extra loud all night radios and alarms keep deer away, as the noise frightens them. Covering shrubs and small trees with seasonal fencing or netting in early spring will protect foliage.

Since there is not just one magical repellent plant that works well for all land regions, there is no guarantee that even they will prevent deer from devouring your garden. This is compounded by the fact that if deer find a new food to feed on, a former repellent plant becomes obsolete. And finally, if deer are famished, they will forage on just about anything, even plants they usually avoid.

After a long, hard winter, deer are ravenous and will seek out early flowering trees, such as sugar and Japanese maples, so late blooming plants would be a better option for plant repellents. In the fall when deer need to store body fat to survive the winter months, they seek out oils and starches. Bayberry and dogwood, for example, are plants which supply those dietary needs. They serve as a sort of plant decoy distracting the deer, so that other garden vegetation which may have been susceptible to their feeding is left alone. Remember, deer find it difficult to swallow foliage which is fuzzy and fibrous such as lamb's ear, forget-me-nots and Virginia bluebells.

Overall, there are many deer plant repellents to consider. These are just a few grouped by category – lavender, daffodils, babysbreath and columbine (perennials); holly, St. John's wart, juniper and lilac (shrubs), and finally – petunias, snapdragons, marigolds and begonias (annuals).

Deer are very sensitive to extremely pungent odors and tend not to enjoy bitter, lemon, spicy, minty or sagey tasting foods and smells. One option would be to spray a homemade concoction of rotten eggs, hot pepper flakes, vinegar, garlic, and dishwashing soap on your plants. Even diluted with water, deer will stay away to avoid this scent.

Here's another go-natural repellent – urine. First place goes to the coyote, followed by fox, wolf, cougar, bobcat and even humans. All of these species are deer predators and therefore deer don't stick around.

You can also apply chemicals, which prove to be costly and time consuming since applications must be done on a regular basis, and always after a steady rainfall. Currently, only two repellents have USDA approval: Milorganite and Hinder. Milorganite is actually a fertilizer used to keep deer away and Hinder will not harm homegrown fruits or vegetables.

Other deer deterrents include human hair, baby powder, fabric softener sheets tied around stakes,

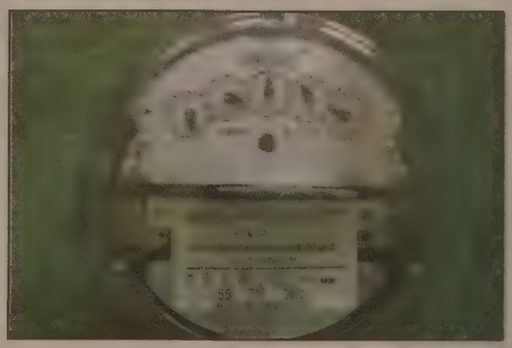
Wrap, Seal, & Save

In this age of soaring energy costs, it's no wonder that most home owners are looking for ways to reduce their energy bills. Many home energy solutions involve expensive or complicated equipment that most Americans don't need – or know what to do with. And some of these high-end, energy-efficient appliances – although environmentally friendly – are often the most expensive and could take years to pay for themselves. However, there are some actions you can take right now to reduce your energy-related expenses.

Windows. Cold air leaks in through them in the winter and heat comes in during the summer. Even window replacements – considered a highly efficient way to insulate the home, thus cutting down heating costs – don't always pay for themselves.

One inexpensive way to deal with this problem is to employ weather-stripping on all your windows and doors. The weather-strip seals up all those cracks and crevices where cold air could be leaking in. It's not a permanent solution, but it's very cost-efficient. You should replace the stripping every few years, but it will really help to insulate your home. One package of ten feet of foam weather-strip should only cost a few dollars.



Air-Conditioning/Heating System. The easiest, least expensive, and most effective thing homeowners can do is replace their heater/air-conditioner thermostat. A basic thermostat can cost as little as $20 and a fancy programmable thermostat only costs $100. A thermostat may last up to 20 years and could deliver up to 35% in annual energy savings. A high-end thermostat allows homeowners to program the thermostat to start and stop at certain times and, depending upon your heater and home, if you can install zone valves, you might be able to zone off the parts of the house that aren't being used and don't require heat/air-conditioning.

Air conditioners often account for about 20% of home energy usage. An older air conditioner can be made more efficient by upgrading it rather than by replacing an entire system. An upgrade, in many instances, will cost you far less than replacing the unit. However, if you are considering buying a new air conditioner, it is important to consider the compressor. Although a compressor can be replaced, they tend to be expensive. An efficient air-conditioner compressor, however, could reduce energy usage by 15%. It is also important to insulate air-conditioning ducts or heating pipes to prevent energy from being lost.

Water Heater. The water heater, on average, accounts for between 15% and 25% of household fuel costs. If an annual fuel bill, for example, is $1,000, the water heater is responsible for between $150 and $250 of that cost. Replacing an existing water heater with something substantially more expensive (several thousand dollars) may cut down fuel usage, but it could take a long time before the energy savings cover the premium cost. However, you can reduce water-heating costs by installing water-efficient fixtures, such as low-flow showerheads, which only spray 2.5 gallons per minute as opposed to 4 gallons per minute. Additionally, a water-heater jacket, which should only cost about $15 to $20, will insulate the heater and prevent energy losses.

Other tips to help conserve energy involve turning your home thermostat down by two degrees. Doing so will save 24-kilowatt hours a month. It might not sound like much, but it adds up.

You should also consider lowering your hot water thermostat 10 degrees, but no lower than 120 degrees. You'll still get all the hot water you need but you'll save 25-kilowatt hours a month. That's assuming you're heating with electricity. If you heat with gas, the savings could be more because in many parts of the country gas costs have risen even more. Another thing you can do is fix leaky faucets. One drip a second amounts to 20 kilowatts a month.

In addition to the above, one of the best things you can do to help conserve energy is to get a home energy audit every couple of years with your power company to find ways to cut costs. These audits, whether

Trees in Full Bloom

Pink flowers litter the streets, leaving a carpet of rosy petals blowing behind an accelerating car. This is our springtime, and it wouldn't be the same without the flowering trees that burst pink against the sky, shouting for the world to awaken before falling gracefully to the sandy street.

A tree is a worthy investment in any yard or garden. Unlike many flowers, it will continue to grow for decades to come, reproducing its flowers, its fruits, and its leaves as the years roll by. A tree has an identity in all seasons, from the time the buds first open to the time snowflakes dust the bare branches. And lucky for us, there are several varieties of flowering trees that thrive in our climate. You know, because you've seen magnolia trees dotting the wide road of Lily Pond Lane. You've gazed at the roomy canopy of a weeping cherry as it gathers an entire front yard into its embrace.

Magnolia trees always strike me as rare even though they are native to the United States, and they seem to burst from every other front yard in spring. Their white and pale pink flowers never cease to demand awe. They are a hardy species of trees that come in both deciduous (leaf-losing) and evergreen varieties. Magnolias are the state flower of both Louisiana and Mississippi, but they are widespread across the country. There are 223 different species of magnolias, and 80 of them reside in the United States. Magnolia blossoms consist of nine petals in three layers.

The trees do well in sandy soil like we have here on the East End. Planting a magnolia tree from the seed may mean it won't actually begin to produce flowers for twenty years, so you can purchase saplings at local nurseries and get faster results. One way to bring the enjoyment of magnolia blossoms into your home is to take a fallen flower and float it in a simple glass bowl.

Another classically beautiful and delightfully abundant tree in these parts is the cherry tree. Every year, the light pink blossoms float on the spring breeze. And while they are one of the trademarks of our nation's capital, they grow all over the United States and actually trace their origins back to Asia. They were introduced to Europe through Rome around 70 BC.

Cherry trees are members of the rose family. There are two varieties that bear fruit: one brings forth sour cherries, the other sweet cherries. The trees in this part of the country, however, are valued only for their beautiful flowers and their strong, high quality wood. Cherry wood has a reddish color and actually produces a distinctive aroma, even after the tree has been cut down.

Cherry trees thrive in this locale, so planting them in your own yard is possible. For deciduous varieties, make sure you find a sunny place for them to grow. If you purchase an evergreen variety, it will only need partial shade. Plant your sapling as soon as you can, and if we go through a dry spell, make sure to water it deeply. What a celestial scene: to be leaning up against the trunk of a cherry tree in full bloom, reading a book or lost in thought.

The flowering dogwood tree is another gorgeous addition to Long Island, and is also found around the United States. These trees are relatively small, and are known as "understory trees" because they often grow in the shade of larger trees. The trunk can grow to about thirty feet tall, but it is only about 8 inches in

The TV Made Me Fix It!

Television programming has come a long way in the area of home improvement shows. Just about anything you can think of that you might want to do to your home you can see first...not in the aisles of your favorite D-I-Y retail outlet or on the glossy pages of a shelter publication, but on the tube. From the venerable This Old House to the more mod and slightly mad Trading Spaces, television is capitalizing on America's obsession with all-things-home.

Was it just 25 years ago that Bob Vila graced TV screens across the country providing homeowners with tips on how to improve their nests? With an eye for classic details, Vila imparted to a generation of Americans the knowledge and information to help them create or ably re-create their dream home. In the process, he spawned a revolution in home improvement TV with the series launch of This Old House on PBS in 1979.

Those were heady and exciting times, and while This Old House has gone the way of the dinosaur, in its place a delightful and interesting crop of home improvement shows have sprung up, including Bob Vila's Home Again. Though it has been on the air for 15 years, in this new incarnation Vila continues to enthrall audiences as he tackles a plethora of home renovation projects from the transformation of an authentic Cape Cod cape to assisting housing efforts for Habitat for Humanity, to Shingle Style revivals, suburban ranch re-dos, over-the-top colonials and modest Craftsman bungalows. Throughout all of the projects, the unifying theme has been an attention to historic detail, where applicable, complemented by thoughtful and thorough planning.

Newcomer Trading Spaces opened the floodgates for reality-based makeover television shows. The premise of Trading Spaces is simple...neighbors agree to "re-do" a room in each other's home and are given a set budget to go hog wild. The results are often lovely, but sometimes it's like a train wreck – so incomprehensible that someone would actually redecorate a room in this manner, it's impossible to tear your eyes away. All of which has contributed to the program's spectacular early success as well as unleashing a slew of wannabes.

Extreme Makeover: Home Edition features Ty Pennington, the former carpenter cutie from Trading Spaces. In this heart-tugger of a home improvement show, the lives of a family are transformed for the better – floors are replaced, facades redone, interior walls moved. On each episode, Pennington surprises a lucky family with a knock

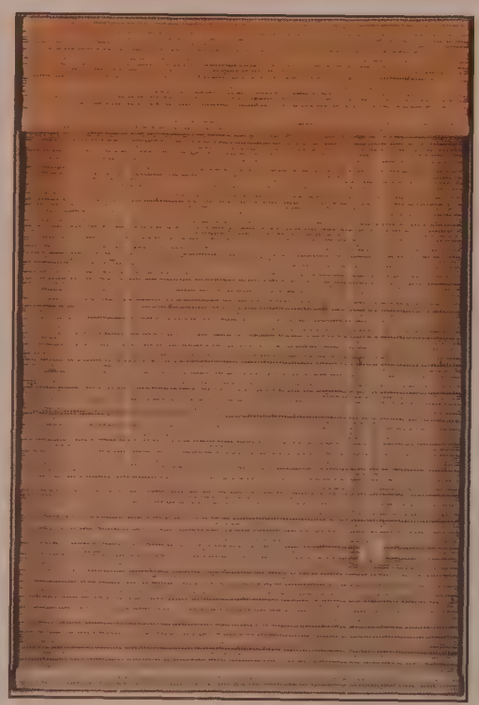
Bringing Outdoors In

Ever get perplexed stares when you refer to the Hamptons as "the country?" Growing up in New York City, or "the city," it only seemed natural to refer to the East End as "the country." Bugs, grass, houses, we even have deer out here. When I went to college, however, I realized that what I thought to be nature was a far cry from what most other people considered it to be. Nevertheless, with a little help from the likes of Martha Stewart, I have no doubt that misguided New Yorkers, like myself, can manage to transform an ordinary Hamptons house into something truly fresh and of course, natural.

Low maintenance and decorative, a definitive current trend in interior design are materials that come straight from nature – egg shells, banana leaves, bamboo, coconut fibers, water hyacinth... the key to their popularity resides in the fact that they are decorative, while at the same time robust. Christian Carlsen of King's Road Home (42 Wooster Street, NYC 212 941-5011) has incorporated many of these so called "new naturals," into designs sold at his store. Claiming that by "bringing the outdoors in... a lot of texture [is created]. An interior with these materials invites you to touch it and see what it's all about. New naturals are also low maintenance and require only dusting so there's no polishing or waxing."

The artist A.J. Obara, who appeared on HGTV's Design Basics, to address the topic of "Bringing the Outdoors In," presented four very useful basic design tips to follow when going for a natural feel for your home. He suggests choosing patterns and colors that reflect the outdoors such as rustic terra cotta, rich browns, leafy greens, and cool blues. Because these are all colors found in nature, you can use them prominently for window, floors, prints, fabrics and accessories. Natural materials such as stone, wood, iron, bamboo, granite and many kinds of tile are great materials to add color and texture to an organic design.



Obara also advises taking advantage of the sun to give rooms an outdoor feel. A great way would be to add, when possible, windows or a skylight for maximum effect. He claims that windows allow you to borrow space from outside to make the room seem even larger and increase the light. To control the amount of light that filters in, try versatile window treatments likes shades or blinds, which also can be found in natural materials. Finally, he suggests bringing nature inside. Plants, flowers, and natural wood add color to a home and make you feel you're surrounded by nature. When bringing plants in, mix tall and short ones together to make the room look more balanced and attractive.

Woven reed rugs are ideal for flooring, sitting, and sleeping surfaces. Novica.com offers a great selection of them as well as an explanation of the history of the rugs they are selling. Prices range from around $50 to the mid hundreds depending on the size of the rug (the wool rug, 4' x 6' in Jade Plaid, at $132.95 is a nice choice).

If you're not looking to shell out a lot of cash, bamboo blinds are widely and cheaply available. Besides being great for a countryside look, the weave of most bamboo blinds not only allow for privacy, but are great light filters. Available in manual, motorized, or easy-roll, they can be purchased at bouclair.com, where they come in great colors such as walnut, mahogany, natural, white, and blue (price around $10).

For the craftier Hamptonite, Kitty Bartholomew, of HGTV's Your Home, suggests embellishing a vase with natural fiber products. The first step is to add natural fibers to a papier-mâché vase. Mix white glue and water (about 70 percent glue and 30 percent water). Chose a handmade banana-fiber paper and banana-fiber mesh and tear the paper in order to leave soft, natural edges. Next, dip a piece of torn handmade paper in the glue mixture, squeeze it out, and apply it to the vase, smoothing some areas of the paper and leaving others raised to add dimension. Continue until you achieve the desired effect. Some areas can be left uncovered to allow the original papier-mâché finish to show through.

Lastly, an important point to remember, according to talented, up and coming interior designer Rachel Caraviello, is to "go for the actual material like a wood veneer, not something like a fake laminate that pretends to be something that it's not."

So while "the country" might not be exactly the right term to use when referring to the Hamptons, with only a couple of additions, you can easily incorporate some nature to give your fabulous home a countryside touch.

tive, you can use this skill to frustrate your opposing family members and even move your teammate's balls closer. Also, the USBF mentions that shooting "Volo," or lofting the ball in the air instead of rolling it is allowed, but hosts can ban it for safety reasons if necessary. If you play on the beach, it's pretty much a straight up Volo game.

You'll find that Bocce is good for hours of amusement and fun for everyone young and old. The above rules are simple, but bending them shouldn't diminish your good time. Any surface is okay to play on, but if you love the game and want to build a court, it should be 87.6 feet long by about 10-12 feet wide, and filled with some nice tennis court clay and a drainage system. The sliver of area needed won't take up a lot of space, but one of the beautiful things about the game is that you really don't need the court. Bocce is a great game that you can play anywhere, and it won't leave you sweaty for dinner.

dateddoorintl.com) sells expandable darkroom units. Visit your local photography shop or your plumbing supply store and inquire about a sink for developing; just make sure it is large enough for your developing trays.

A clean and organized room is essential in processing film. Designate a "dry area" and a "wet area." The wet area is generally predetermined by where the sink is situated. The dry area should be as far away from that as possible (preferably near a power outlet). In the dry area, you will find your enlarger, photographic paper, and lightproof storage bins for the paper. The wet area should house all the chemicals and measuring devices you will use in the process of developing film. In addition, paper towels are good to keep around to quickly clean up spills or just to dry off your hands (always wear gloves when dealing with chemicals).

Installing a lightproof ventilation fan is a must and should be done by a professional electrician. Ideally, the vent should be in close proximity to the wet area, as the chemical fumes are what you are trying to ventilate.

Installing safe lights (amber, orange, or red) will allow you to operate in the darkroom and not expose the film. Bulbs or lamp systems can be purchased at photography stores.

These are the main steps to creating a darkroom. Clearly you will also need supplies like an enlarger and timer, measuring vessels, developing trays, tongs, possibly a drying machine, as well as many other tools to allow you to process your own film. But without the setup, all the tools in the world won't help you get a perfect picture, and then you'll truly be left in the dark.

moth ball flakes, blood meal, and Irish spring soap, which washes deer right away.

One of the most highly effective methods is the fence. Height fences should be between 7-10' high; otherwise deer will simply leap right over them. Deer have poor depth perception and fear getting entangled or caught between anything. That is why a double fence spaced 3-4' apart and angled fences (about 30 degrees from the garden) prevent deer from invading your landscape. Also make sure that fences are deeply embedded into the ground, otherwise deer will go right through and/or underneath them.

If repellent plants, urine, fences or the hair on your head don't appeal to you, you could always go back to basics by getting yourself a good guard dog. A loud bark usually is enough to keep deer at bay.

Putting Your Plants in Their Place

Got plants in need of a pot? If so, it is good to know what you want to grow in order to select the right pot. The two most important features to consider when potting is to make sure there are holes on the bottom for proper drainage and enough room at the top for watering. For a container without holes, make some by drilling them into the base. Should you decide you don't want to ruin the container which you've chosen with holes, simply line the bottom with pebbles before adding soil to protect the root system.

What makes potting your plants so much fun is that there is less work (you don't have to spend hours weeding and digging) and best of all they are movable. You can carry plants in or outside and can feature them in full bloom when they come into season.

Pots should provide sufficient space for the roots to grow, but not to the point where they fill up the entire container. It is important that the size allows for enough room to facilitate air, water and nutrient flow. Water can be retained if the pot is too large, which produces an overabundance of moisture and nutrients, causing the plant to stop growing and eventually rot. On the other hand, root growth will be restricted and therefore the plants will not develop properly if the container is too small. The mismatched proportion may also cause the pot to tip over. An indication that your plant may have to be placed into a larger pot is when the roots start to emerge out of the drainage hole.

Another thing to bear in mind when picking out the plant pot is the color. Darker pots (such as cast iron) absorb more heat, causing damage to roots. To solve this, simply paint the pot a lighter color or cover it with a shade.

Here are some different types of materials to consider when choosing a plant pot.

For the ecologically minded, Worldwise (a company specializing in environmental consumer products – worldwise.com) makes a biodegradable plant pot out of recycled newspapers and corrugated cardboard boxes. A real innovative transplanter, you can actually plant the whole pot in your garden because it breaks down into the soil. Just think: a pot that is not wasted!

Although terra cotta is the classic of the potted plant world, without care they can easily break, chip or crack. These pots are difficult to move because they are heavy and cumbersome. Compared to other pots, terra cotta are more porous and therefore your plants will need additional watering. Glazed terra cotta pots are less porous, but be aware that some glazes may contain lead, which could be detrimental to plants.

Worldwise also makes a Terra Notta container. This pot is made out of recycled plastic and rubber. Unlike terracotta, they can't be damaged. They also have good insulation, which helps retain moisture so less water is required. When it's time for repotting just give this pot a squeeze to break soil free for simple removal.

Finally, there are plastic pots. Some have been redesigned and look just like the classy terra cottas. And best of all they are light, cheap and retain moisture well. Now that's a real planter extraordinaire!

Potted plants should be elevated. If they are not, water accumulates, causing surfaces to stain, discolor, blister, and mold. Raising your pots not only saves your floors, rugs and furniture from being ruined; they can also be arranged on different levels, resulting in a vibrant artistic display.

An herb that is just made for potting is mint. It can be planted both in and out of doors and nothing can beat its spring fresh scent. (Interior planting can be done year round as mint requires less than 6 hours of sunlight.) When planting indoors, use a 4" pot, or use a 6" pot for outside. Whether planting mint in or outdoors, always use a container, because mint has runners that go above and below the surface and require boundaries. Mint without any borders becomes invasive and should be limited to one per container.

Potted plants are easy to work with. They are a snap to move, are not labor intensive, and can add to the beauty of your home by gracing both interior and exterior spaces with a wide array of lively scents and colors.

Lean Back, Put Your Feet Up, and Relax

You'd be hard pressed to find anyone who doesn't love to lean back in a reclining chair, put up his or her feet, and relax, with the TV remote in hand and a snack and beverage within reach. This particular activity – or inactivity – dates back at least to the 1800s (minus the remote control, of course).

Henry Kennedy, a cabinetmaker and upholsterer of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was issued the first U.S. patent for a reclining chair in 1841. Its primitive design did not offer much in the way of comfort, yet it did allow people to recline and put their feet up, and was the prototype for more comfortable designs to follow.

In 1928, Americans got some serious help relaxing when two young cousins named Edward Knabusch and Edwin Shoemaker in Monroe, Michigan, came up with the idea for a new kind of chair that would automatically recline if a person simply leaned back. They tried to sell a few of the porch chairs to a department store buyer in Toledo, Ohio, but he said he had no use for a "seasonal chair." Instead, the buyer advised the cousins that if they added some stuffing and upholstery, the chair could be used year round and might sell well.

The cousins took the man's advice and hired an upholsterer, spending months perfecting the design. In 1931, Knabusch and Shoemaker received a patent for the first automatic recliner, but realized they needed a better name than "automatic adjustable chair." They decided to hold a name-picking contest with their seven employees and came up with several names including the "Comfort Carrier," the "Slack-Back," and the "Sit-N-Snooze." Someone came up with the name "La-Z-Boy" and that's the name they chose. Eventually other companies came up with their own recliner variations, and in1947 the Barcalounger Company added the built-in footrest.

Throughout the 1950s, big, bulky recliners took their place in front of new television sets. But by the 1970s, the recliner moved from the den to the basement. The problem was taste. The over-stuffed clunkers, that once looked comfy, had gone out of style.

More than a decade later they came back – this time with sleeker looks and classier fabrics. Propelled by sales to baby boomers, "motion furniture" is now a $4 billion industry. Recliners even played starring roles in TV shows like Friends.

The "High-Touch Massage Chair," invented by San Francisco practitioner David Palmer in 1986, was the first massage-specific chair that allowed anyone to receive a full-body massage. Intended to emulate the motions and techniques of an actual masseuse, the goal of the massage chair was to relieve stress, tension, and alleviate back pain. Although massage chairs were initially slow to catch on, after a decade or so interest in the technology increased, spurring competitors to strive for the most effective models.

Most massage chairs are designed to involve three main components intended to closely match massage techniques:

Massage chair motor. This is the essential mechanical aspect of the massage chair. It powers and moves the nodes and rollers to the necessary areas, and allows for the adjustments of the seat back.

The massage chair has numerous preset patterns and programs used to massage the entire back. However, the motors, nodes, and rollers are meant to be modified through the control pad that accompanies all massage chairs. As the user specifies, the massage chair focuses on the neck down to the lower back, with a tapping motion, rolling motion, or kneading motion.

Massage chair nodes and rollers. These vary in size and shape, designed to emulate fingers and hands. A massage chair with large rollers and nodes provides a more generalized approach at massaging, while chairs with smaller nodes and rollers provide the more detailed, point-specific massaging. They target specified areas of the user's back and can move in a variety of ways, which are pre-programmed into the mechanics of the chair.

Computer assisted adjustability of the massage chair. Almost all massage chairs are designed to automatically adjust for the weight, height, and width of the selected user. By measuring the pressure on the seatback, the protrusion of the rollers and nodes automatically adjusts. In addition, by locating specific areas on the anatomy of the back, the massage chair makes the necessary adjustments for the height and width of the user.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Aromatic Perennial

Gardeners are always on the lookout for plants that are reliable and provide a great showing in the garden. While everyone likes unusual or unique specimens that provide interest, plant staples add to the ease of gardening and also provide points of interest in the summer landscape.

Agastache is one of the easier perennials to grow. It is able to be either a specimen or great border backdrop. However, it is hard to distinguish whether Agastache is more an herb or a flower. Certainly, it is one staple gardeners will recognize. Its aromatic leaves, manageable size, and long-blooming, spires of flowers seem to fit both categories and make it a wonderful choice for the sunny, protected border regardless of its use. The leaves are beautiful, mint- or anise-scented, and come in colors of lime-green to grey or reddish brown. They are a fairly effective mosquito repellent when crushed and rubbed on bare skin. The flowers are beautiful and rich pink, orange, blue, or purple in color.

Agastache, also called Hyssop or Hummingbird Mint (in Europe it is known as Brittonastrum), is a group of some 30 species of aromatic perennials. It has long been a favorite of English gardeners. The plants belong to the Lamiaceae family, which includes the lavenders. Unlike the lavenders, Agastache is much easier to grow and will tolerate some shade. The plant probably originated in central and eastern Asia, the U.S., and Mexico. It is quite comfortable in Northeast gardens, where it has been a staple for most gardeners!

Agastache is a great specimen plant, a wonderful addition to the back of mixed borders, and a welcome addition to herb gardens. It needs space to grow because it can attain dimensions of four feet high and wide. The aromatic quality of the leaves and flowers is highly attractive to bees, butterflies, and hummingbirds. This means it is important to locate the plant where it will not negatively affect visitors (you want a spot where hummingbirds can be observed, but direct contact with bees can be avoided).

Agastache is easily propagated from seed in early spring. However, it is not the fastest growing plant. The best approach to adding this plant to the garden is achieved by purchasing mature stock from local nurseries. Later on, you can propagate divisions of the established plant, and even use semi-ripe cuttings taken in late summer to increase the number.

It is easy to grow prize-winning examples! To do so, select a spot that is not too wet: one where the plant will receive full sun and have space to grow. Agastache tolerates heat and drought well so the spot can be somewhat dry. As with most perennials, Agastache benefits from enriched, well-draining soil. Cultivate the soil to a depth of about 12 inches and enrich it with compost, dehydrated manure, and/or peat. Situate the plant so the soil in the

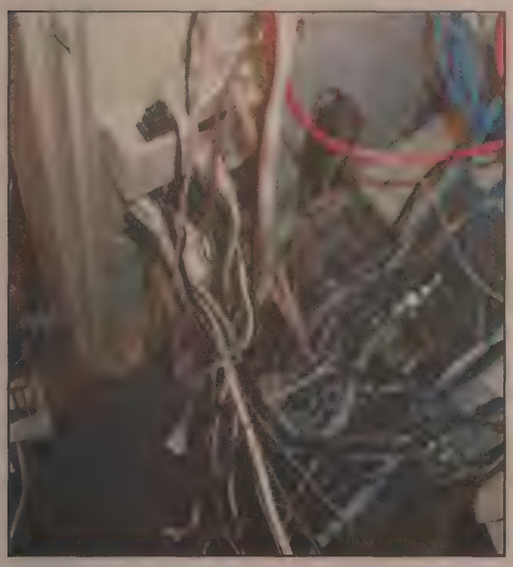
Dan's HOME Guide

Hotwiring Your House

In the olden days, when your options were electricity or gas for your lighting needs, your choices were simple. But with today's world of ever-growing modern amenities, laying out the electrics in your home has taken on a new sense of responsibility. Building codes have only added to this arduous task, making demands on homeowners such as installing electric outlets every-so-many feet as a safety precaution, which also prevents the house from looking like an unwound ball of extension cords.

Not thinking ahead will limit the aesthetics and layout of your home. I'm sure you've seen homes with cable wires running along the floor moldings of a room or a thirty foot telephone cord not-so-subtly buried under an area rug. These are little things, but they do make a huge difference in a home. Nowhere is pre-planning your wiring more important than in the living room/den/media room of your house. The simple fact that there is such a thing as a media room is a testament to the times, a reminder that we no longer spend quite as many nights cozying up next to the fire as we used to. Regardless of where we spend our free time, there is no excuse for wires running along the floors, under couches, up chimneys, and down walls in order to get appliances to where they need to be.



Speak to your electrician before beginning to wire the home. It's much easier to add things before the walls and floors are sealed up with timber and sheetrock. Plan the layout of the entire room. Since most of our free time these days is based around the television, this is a good place to start. If the television is going to be a plasma or LCD unit that hangs on the wall, inform the electrician that under no circumstances should any wires be visible. Having dangling wires defeats the clean, framed-picture look. Decide where the cable, VCR, DVD, and stereo receiver will be located and have enough outlets installed in that area to fit all the appliances. Determine where your speakers are going to go as well. Surround sound systems generally have diagrams that your electrician can follow. If you want speakers in the ceiling, wire for them before you finish the ceiling. Installing speaker outlets throughout the room gives you options when arranging your sound system, and including speaker outlets on your deck and porch is a clean way of getting music outside without the clutter of portable radios.

Wiring for cable television, Internet, infrared and anything else that may arise is very important. Multi-purpose jacks are a great way to organize electric, cable and telephone lines in all your rooms. Installing a secondary cable jack gives the option of rearranging rooms without dealing with the clutter of wires. In today's world, every room should have at least one phone jack.

A trick to preventing excess wire exposure while getting electrics to the center off a room are floor outlets. These are non-intrusive, generally decorative brass fixtures that allow telephone lines and electrical plugs to be placed anywhere in the home, rendering the extension cord useless. They are perfect for end table lamps or for sneaking a sub-woffer behind the couch. When not used, these outlets can be closed, leaving them flush with the ground.

These are just the basics. The home of the 21st century is becoming a more and more automated place. Today, touchpad systems can be installed into each room of the house that control individual temperature, audio, video, and security systems. Many homes are now installing media closets,

Steve Jacobsen - General Contractor

"My basement renovation was executed by S.P. & C. exactly as it had been planned. Steve's team was punctual, highly professional and had a high degree of attention to detail. The site was always organized and cleaned up at the end of every day. The project was completed on time and on budget, which is perhaps the greatest testimony I can give; apart from mentioning that the completed renovation has greatly increased the value of my home. I would recommend S.P. & C. to anyone for any project."

Andrew Levene

I had the good fortune to meet Steve and his team several years ago. In that time, Steve has done a number of painting and construction jobs at my home. I can happily recommend Steve as a contractor who is responsive to his client's needs, reliably returns calls, is excellent at follow-through, meets deadlines and consistently delivers a very high level of quality in his work. I could not ask for more.

on the door and an upbeat "Good Morning" greeting. With a bevy of designers and contractors, viewers have a ringside seat into the planned renovation of a selected home as well as experience, along with the family, the emotional revelation of seeing the home at its completion.

It's time to get organized! Remember the adage... "a place for everything and everything in its place?" Well, that pretty much sums up Clean Sweep, a home improvement show on The Learning Channel's show roster. Frequently easier to say than it is to achieve, Clean Sweep unleashes a team of experts to help homeowners rid their abode of junk while providing useful tips on how to manage "getting and staying clean" over the long haul. Besides the usual suspects, overstuffed and crowded closets, living rooms or master bedrooms, Clean Sweep invariably does a makeover on a home office space. The over-riding theme with any of the problems addressed on this show is that the residents simply have accumulated way too much stuff.

One of the most unusual home makeover programs to hit the airwaves is Style Network's Guess Who's Coming To Decorate. In an attempt to capture the surprise of the Poitier/Hepburn classic (Guess Who's Coming To Dinner), this home improvement program bills itself as a makeover show unlike any other. With an ample sprinkling borrowed from the television oldie This Is Your Life, Guess Who's Coming To Decorate pairs a mystery decorator from the homeowners' past to revamp and spruce up their homes. As you can imagine, the tension is tight as homeowners attempt to guess who might be inside decorating away, not to mention what their creative vision might be or how it may or may not be the stuff of their dreams.

diameter. The wood of dogwood trees is very sturdy and is often used to make small tools handles and mallets. The fruits of the flowering dogwood are poisonous to people.

Flowering dogwoods blossom pastel in the spring, and in the fall, red berries blossom and the leaves turn crimson. Because of this, they make for a fabulous landscaping plant. When planting a dogwood, make sure to place it in the partial shade of the house or another tree. Don't plant it too deep, but make sure that no more than 1/3 of the root system is above ground. Cover the rest with soil and organic matter, like compost. Keep the soil cool during the summer by placing a layer of wood chips over the roots, and make sure to water it during hot periods.

Flowering trees offer a gift to every car that drives by your house. They are excellent modes of home improvement, enhancing the beauty of your yard from season to season. These lovely symbols of springtime are all around us, and there's no reason why they can't be yours to curl up beneath.

Bonsai!

The first time I encountered a Bonsai was in college. With dorm rooms as small as they were, and with a budding botanist with a professed green thumb as a roommate, we needed something small and worthy. This requirement was met with several awe-inspiring mini-trees, which on first inspection appeared fake. Yet, they were real, living botanical works of art that left an indelible impression. Though I have never tried my hand at raising a bonsai, curiosity about them lingers to this day.

Bonsais are often thought to have originated in Japan, yet their true origin is China, where they first appeared, albeit in a much simpler version, over a thousand years ago. Referred to as pun-sai, these single plant specimens were grown in pots, as they still are today. One of the most striking features about this early version of bonsai were the plant's roots, which were grown to resemble birds, animals, even mystical dragons, and the foliage, which was quite sparse.

The Japanese, who adopted many Chinese customs, are credited with introducing this horticultural art form to the West. Traditionally, the aim of a bonsai plant is to capture the majesty and beauty of a venerable tree without letting on that "man" had a hand in its creation. Unlike the bonsai of ancient China, modern plantings may consist of more than one type of specimen tree, though strictly speaking, trees of different species, which have been miniaturized and planted together in a single pot, are referred to as "saikei."

There are five main bonsai styles. These include the formal upright style, which resembles a traditional tree, yet is much smaller in size and diameter. Typically, for this arrangement evergreens are recommended, though maples are also a popular choice. Next is the informal upright and as the name suggests is not as conformist in presentation as the formal upright and its tree trunk bends slightly to the left or right. The cascade bonsai dips below the base of its container much like hanging ivy drapes over its pot. The semi-cascade protrudes over the base of its container, but does not project below its base. The slanting bonsai, whether straight or curved, leans at a definite angle.

According to www.bonsaiboy.com, a comprehensive web portal for all things bonsai, enthusiasts are cautioned to be careful not to over water or under water their plants. Bonsais are planted in soil just like a houseplant, but the similarity ends there. In order to thrive, bonsais require a "free draining" soil mixture because they are susceptible to root rot. To avoid this condition, experts advise using a moisture meter to help gauge waterings. Meters work on the same principle as a thermometer; after inserting in the soil the needle will indicate whether or not to water.

Because bonsais are planted in less soil than

How Does Your Garden Grow?

With four acres of trees, shrubbery and flowers, 2,500 square feet of retail space, and an adorably quirky Scottish terrier named Charlotte, it's no wonder there's a buzz about Shelter Island Gardens, the only full-service landscape architecture firm on Shelter Island.

In September, if you were to have asked Erin Hanlon what she had planned for the summer, owning and operating her own landscape design company wouldn't have been the first thing out of her mouth. But that changed when the nursery was placed on the market this past winter. Toying with the idea, Ms. Hanlon began crunching the numbers and touring the property. She quickly realized that it was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. After setting her mind on the idea, the process came together quickly. And suddenly, like a bud awakening from winter frost, Ms. Hanlon's nursery doors opened.

Gaining a degree in landscape architecture from the acclaimed program at the Rhode Island School of Design, Erin quickly landed a job working under the tutelage of Charlie Marder at the celebrated landscape architecture firm in Bridgehampton that bears his name. "Charlie was instrumental in teaching me about East End landscaping. After all, he's the man that created the industry," Erin said, referring to Charlie's remarkable work on such Hamptons estates as The Creeks. Taking what she'd learned at Marders and bringing it to Shelter Island seemed to be the next step in Ms. Hanlon's progression as a landscape architect. "It just felt right," she said.

The nursery, located on St. Mary's Road, is constantly growing, becoming increasingly filled with a wide assortment of flora, including weeping birches, Snow Fountain Cherries, European Beeches, and Dawn Redwoods. On a Sunday tour of the grounds, Ms. Hanlon pointed to an area overflowing with flats of pansies and daisies. The space was anchored by twisted vines of ancient wisteria. "In a week they'll start blooming," she said, "and then you'll see how beautiful the grounds really are."

According to local residents, the property was being seriously underutilized by its previous owners. But now it seems people are stopping in just to see how much the nursery has changed. "It's funny - that saying about how much difference a few flowers can make - it's true," one customer told me as she studied an array of Gerber Daisies. "We just stopped because we saw so many flowers."

Kenny McGinnis continues to run the retail side of the nursery, as he did under the previous ownership. He clearly knows the lay of land, pun intended. It also seems like he knows everyone on the island, greeting most customers by first name. "Kenny's a real asset," Erin said. "He really knows the business. I trust his judgment when it comes to the shop."

But the nursery isn't just about selling pretty flowers. Because the island is so ecologically sensitive, Shelter Island Gardens has made great efforts to be an organically minded company. Looking to support and foster the growth of native

Letting in the Sun, Sans the Suffering

Tired of high utility bills? Is fading ruining your furnishings and valuables? Harmful sunrays causing you discomfort? Is distracting glare giving you a headache? Want to stop hiding from the sun?

As much as we enjoy the benefits of sunshine, there are times when it can cause problems in our home. Through a new development, one manufacturer has used space-age technology to solve these problems.

Huper Optik Ceramic films utilize German technology to create the world's first nano-ceramic solar control films for the window film industry. Using advanced techniques and enhanced process control, their manufacturing process involves depositing fine ceramic coatings onto ultra clear films to transform the end product into a high performance heat, glare and ultraviolet light barrier. This patented technology can easily outperform all conventional dyed, metallic and powder-coated films available on the market today, while maintaining a clear view.

Economists were forecasting an electricity energy crisis in 1998. In response to these concerns, Huper Optik USA was launched in January of 2000. They introduced window films with low reflectivity and high heat rejection made out of ceramic to answer the market demand.

Their ceramic films are 100% metal-free, 100% dye-free and will not demetallize or fade. Ceramics (often associated with demanding industrial applications) are known to be the most durable material, capable of enduring the harshest environments on land and at sea. Unlike dyed or metallized films, Huper Optik's spectrally tuned ceramic films offer superb heat rejection properties without compromising visibility, have low reflectivity and will not appear shiny. A natural view is maintained both day and night.

Ceramics are tough and stable materials. Due to their ability to withstand adverse conditions, they are used in space shuttles, integrated circuit component chips – even in industrial drill bits and cutting tools. The Huper Optik Ceramic coating is an extremely thin layer of the electrically conductive transition metal oxynitride, which has intrinsic solar selectivity originating from its unique molecular structure. Nano-ceramics are atomic-fine, equivalent to 0.000000001m, discrete optical coatings that are deposited through reactive plasma processes. They are therefore able to reject more heat.

Here are some of their benefits:

- Increases comfort, leading to a cooler interior
- Reduces glare and fading of interior upholstery
- Saves energy by reducing fuel/ electricity consumption
- Protects against sun-related skin problems
- Enhances safety with improved glass shatter resistance
- Enhances overall aesthetics with a soft neutral shade

Features of these ceramic films include:

- Reject up to 68% total solar energy
- Reject greater than 99.9% ultraviolet light
- Reject up to 92% infrared light
- Offer a soothing visible light transmission from 20% to 60%
- Reduce light pollution, achieving 9% visible light reflection
- Protect against glass injuries by holding shattered panes together
- Enhance original aesthetics with neutral tones

Redline Professional Tinting, an exclusive Long Island dealer of Huper Optic Smart Window Films, serves the tri-state area with over 14 years experience. They have a wide variety of tinting solutions to assist their clients in finding the right film for their needs. Dan's HOME Guide

An Outdoor Living Room

Summer is almost here and it's time to either buy new outdoor furniture or rejuvenate the old set you've had for years. With so many variations of wood, metals and designs, the outdoor furniture market has definitely grown in design and quality. The days of redwood picnic tables are something of the past (well, maybe not entirely for some). Today you can select from an assortment of exotic woods and other materials that include such woods as Teak, Jarrah and Tropical Eucalyptus.

Outdoor furniture has taken on a living room concept. There's more to an outdoor living space than your average table, chairs and lounge set. Families build their summer entertainment around the pool, garden and barbeque because they're traveling less. Our homes have become our "vacationland," so it's important to create an oasis of fun and relaxation.

When deciding on the ideal outdoor furniture, research is essential. With so many options available, it's imperative to establish the price point, and consider the durability and style that fit your needs. Outdoor furniture materials range from cast aluminum and wrought iron to wicker, rustic twig and teak. Prices vary according to the design and manufacturing company.

Most woods can last up to 20 years or more with the proper care. Such woods as Teak, Jarrah, and Shorea can last up to 50 years (that explains the price tag). In essence, you always get what you pay for. Although I can't imagine keeping the same outdoor furniture for 50 years, a simple warm water and detergent mixture and special wood oil treatments will keep the wood clean and looking healthy for many years.

Pine is the most affordable wood. The only drawback is that Pine is a softer wood so it must be pressure treated for outdoor use. A consideration when investing in outdoor furniture made of wood is its environmental impact. If protecting our forests locally and internationally is something that concerns you, look for the FSC (Forest Stewardship Council) label. The FSC label certifies that the wood used to build the furniture has been properly harvested.

The following are a list of descriptions of several types of wood used for outdoor furniture according to www.sideroad.com: 1. Redwood is known to be very resistant to termites, bears a "red" color and last up to 25 years 2. Jarrah wood is found in Australia and has a red/pink tone 3. Cedar is a light colored wood that is splinter-free as well as very resistant to insects, mold, mildew and decay. Will last up to 25 years 4. Teak is very popular these days and has a honey brown color. Teak is forrested mostly in Southeast Asia 5. Shorea is forested in Indonesia and Malaysia and is considered stronger than Teak and will last just as long (and is more affordable) 6. Tropical Eucalyptus is found in Australia and is very durable. This wood will turn a silvery tone as it weathers 7. Roble wood comes from South America and is a lightweight wood 8. Alder, Cypress and Willow trees are used to make twig furniture. It's recommended to use a clear finishing varnish for added protection.

And if wood is not for you, there are many other outdoor options including the very inexpensive types of Resin furniture. This furniture is great for those who seek low maintenance. This man-made plastic furniture is long-lasting and easy to care

Seaside Decorating Ideas

I've always dreamed of living on the water or near the beach, and my wish recently came true. Luckily for me, I've been shopping for some time with that very thought in mind and have purchased an assortment of seaside and beach items over the past few years.

Beach decorating can start with a few simple touches. And if you have a collection of shells you're already ahead of the game. I have created many of my own unique items, like the centerpiece on my coffee table. I used a large glass bowl with a candle in the center surrounded by an assortment of shells (well, it wasn't my idea –I bought the bowl and then borrowed the idea from Privet Cove in Southampton). Glass bowls in assorted shapes and sizes allow you to tailor your creation to the space you want to fill. Shells can also be used to scatter on shelves or tabletops. Starfish, sand dollars, sea urchin shells, and abalone shells are excellent choices to add to the décor in your home. Other accent and decorating ideas include shell wind chimes, life preservers, fish sculptures, and shell curtains. I found many great ideas and trinkets at TJ Maxx, in Bridgehampton, Blooming Shells and Beach Bungalow in Sag Harbor.

If you're creative and enjoy making things, there are many ways to decorate inexpensively with a beach theme. The following are just a few crafty ideas to try: take a plain lampshade and glue your favorite shells on the outside; glue shells to a mirror or picture frame; fill a glass bowl or dish with assorted beach glass; paint and hang a wooden sign – Life's a Beach, This way to the Beach, Ditch Plains, Long Beach, etc.; glue shells to a section of fish net and drape it over a window; use broken shells to create a shell mosaic table top, dresser front, backsplash, etc.; make a shell candle (pour candle wax and set wick in the center of a large shell; make shell potpourri (mix beach glass, scented beads, sand and shells in a glass or ceramic dish; create a shell jewelry box with smaller sized shells you can find at our local beaches; make a planter out of a shell or glue shells to the outside of a flower pot.

There is an abundance of unique shells to be found on our beaches locally, or purchased imported. I personally think it adds more character when you collect your own shells. Some popular

What We Call Home

On this great big planet, culture and environment vary widely, but one thing we all have in common is a need for shelter, and a need for a place to call home. Even if that "home" has a different view every night, it's that sleeping bag or that tent that offers a cozy refuge from the surrounding elements. Some people who live in the heart of Manhattan could never imagine life on a sprawling farm with no running water, and people living in a thatched roof hut in Thailand could probably never picture living with no outdoor space to run around. I am a firm believer, though, in the adaptability of people. But even if you are not prepared for a cultural exchange where you have to live in an adobe hut, take an exchange in the imagination. What would life be like if you were born across the world?

When visiting a foreign land, be it the heart of Kansas or the thick of the rainforest, one of the first things you see is the tops of the roofs.

Thatched Roof

Patchwork quilts of tin roofs litter the green hills of Costa Rica. They appear in all shades of rust, from the dusty crimson to the shiny new silver. When I was first exposed to a tin roofed house in a rainstorm, I was convinced that it was the musical pounding of the rain on the metal that spurred so many countries to depend on tin roofs for shelter, but upon looking deeper into the subject, I learned that tin roofs are, above all, cheap. They are not energy efficient unless you are building a greenhouse in the tropics, because they absorb heat in the hot months. When they are not insulated, they also let all the warm air out in the colder months, so you better have a fireplace or a lot of blankets. This is why you see so many tin roofs in countries along the equator, and they are basically non-existent in seasonal climates. You can, however, insulate a tin roof by simply adding a thatched layer over the metal. This will not only absorb some of the heat or deflect some of the sun's rays, but it will also mute the roar of the rain to a lull. I, too, once thought that I would never want to mute the sound of the rain, but when you're sleeping in the Costa Rican rainforest with raindrops the size of small children, you might need to turn the volume down.

If your plane is descending over the turquoise waters of the Gulf of Thailand, you may be able to catch a glimpse of the thatched roofs sprawled out over wooden huts on stilts, which grace the shoreline. These thatched roofs are almost waterproof, which is amazing considering they are made of woven straw or reeds. As the second little piggy knows, straw is not the most durable material to use, in case of a storm (or a big, bad wolf), but again, it is cheap, and it allows

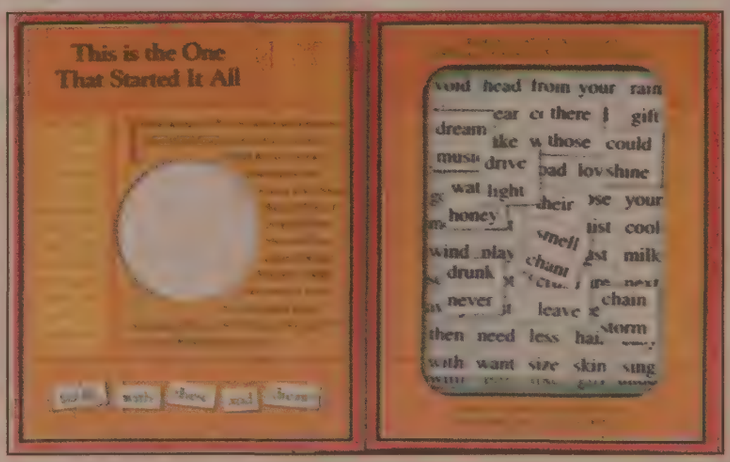
Express Yourself Across the Refrigerator

"Swollen She Swept Past A Languid Moon" and "Heave Into Brilliance." What do these two phrases have in common? I wrote them both using magnetic poetry. What poetic possibilities exist when you are handed a pile of 440 words and a forum to share them! I have written my share of poetry, but it is a different feeling when you actually see the words in front of you and then have the chance to do with them what you will. You sometimes have to stretch your imagination to accommodate the words you are given, but there are also enough words that you have the tools to say what you want to say.



Magnetic Poetry is a fabulous addition to your home. A single word is printed on one of 440 little magnets, and the words are stuck to the front of your refrigerator, or any other magnetic surface. The rest of the job is yours; arranging words in creative, funny, or poignant ways to share. Remember when your parents used to stick your homework to the refrigerator when you did a good job? That feeling of pride plastered to the refrigerator can come back with magnetic poetry!

Magnetic Poetry is a cultural phenomenon that began with a songwriter, Dave Kapell. He was experiencing a bout of the dreaded writer's block while attempting to write lyrics, so he wrote down a bunch of words he found intriguing on separate pieces of paper. Then, he began arranging them. Unfortunately, Dave was experiencing, along with writer's block, the dreaded allergies, and after he had composed his masterpiece on the floor, he sneezed and sent the poem flying around the room. He decided to glue the words onto magnets, and began writing his songs on the refrigerator. His new form of poetry became a hit with his friends, who spent all their time at his house staring at his refrigerator. He brought the word kits to a local craft fair and they sold out in three hours, and the rest is history. Since then, Magnetic Poetry has sold over three million word kits, including the Original, Kids' Kits, Foreign Language Kits, and more.

Magnetic Poetry has extended beyond the realm of the refrigerator now, offering a board game. Players take a Subject card and then have two minutes to write a poem about it. Also available are poetry beads. This kit comes with 76 word beads with a word printed on each side. You can create your own saying or poem and make a necklace or bracelet out of it. The kit also comes with twenty multi-colored accent beads. There are now a wide variety of kits offered as well, from Shakespeare to Erotic to America and back again. In addition, there are other products like the "Writer's Remedy," which includes over 300 word tiles to cure a case of writer's block. All of these items are available online at www.magneticpoetry.com.

Their website is interactive and fun: you can play with magnetic poetry online, or submit to their online anthology. You can also read the submissions of others, and rate them on a scale of 1 to 10.

There is no limit to what classifies as a poem. Still, for many people, writing poetry is an intimidating thought. Magnetic Poetry, however, somehow allows people to shed the expectation that it has to be a certain way. You can just take the words given to you and throw them together in the way you see fit. It is actually exactly the same as writing poetry yourself; it's just that someone has now given you the tools you need to express what's been waiting to be expressed.

common houseplants, they need to be fertilized more frequently, since they will be receiving most of their nutrients in this manner. The Phoenix Bonsai Society recommends a nitrogen, potassium and phosphorus mix fertilizer, which will increase the plant's hardiness and promote overall health. Bonsais, like most plants, should never be fertilized in winter, which for most plants is their dormant time. Instead, plants are given a small amount of feed in the spring, gradually increasing over the summer until a larger and final dose is given in the fall. If you're a novice, using time-release fertilizer granules, such as Osmocote or slow release planting tablets like Gro-Power may ease the process.

Another consideration in bonsai care is humidity. Trees grow in much more humid conditions than what is normally found in most homes. To compensate for this, plants may either be misted or the pot may be set on a tray of constantly wet pebbles (to avoid water/root saturation). As the water evaporates, it creates a "mini-ecosystem" around the bonsai, creating a humid environment 24 hours a day.

Pruning and trimming are crucial to maintaining the form and shape of the plant as well as to reducing its growth. The purpose of trimming and shaping is to maintain a sense of balance between the root system below and the plant's growth above. Shaping a bonsai is an ongoing process that begins when the tree is very young. While no one technique is responsible for miniaturizing a tree, it is the combination of pruning, trimming and keeping it in a container which all contribute to limiting its growth. With consistent and conscientious care, a bonsai can thrive for decades, becoming a prized possession that is passed down through the generations.

for. Many people select this material for their pool areas. Stains and mildew can be removed with a simple mixture of two cups of detergent, one cup of bleach and one gallon of water.

If you're looking for a more elegant "English Garden" appeal, wrought iron furniture is always the perfect choice. Wrought Iron requires a bit more care, but many designs display that classic old-world charm that differs from the other types of wood, aluminum or resin furniture.

Old outdoor furniture can easily be perked up with a good cleaning and a fresh set of cushions. Places such as Kmart, Linens and Things and Target (as well as many local boutiques) offer a wide range of colorful patterned cushions and matching umbrellas.

Get started this weekend; Memorial Day is only two weeks away. Entertain in style and bring your indoor taste to outdoor living this summer.

for the paradise outside to seep in.

Also in Thailand, you will find tiny houses that look like miniature versions of the grandiose temples (wats) that are scattered across the country. These little structures, which could be mistaken for mailboxes or birdhouses, are actually "spirit houses," placed there to give the spirits a place to stay outside the house.

In the more hardy climates, reeds and tin are not going to do the job. If you are flying over glaciers to arrive at your destination, you are going to find a very different type of home. The word "igloo" comes from the Inuit word "Iglu," which simply means "house." The Inuit people in central and western Canada live in snow igloos. These structures, which we often associate with all indigenous people in Alaska and Greenland, have actually ONLY been permanent housing structures for the Inuit in Canada. Almost all other Inuit tribes live in animal skin tents in the summer and sod houses in the winter. The sod is placed over either a wood or whalebone frame.

These houses may seem foreign to us, but imagine if you had never tried to cram all your earthly possessions into a studio apartment that you share with your mother/boyfriend/stranger who can afford the rent. Living in Manhattan, with the world at your fingertips, is quite a cultural phenomenon. Manhattanites have developed a knack for maximizing space as well as time. A fourth story hole-in-the-wall-walk up that rests above a Turkish restaurant may be just as intriguing as a whalebone hut with a polar bear in the front yard, depending, as always, on your perspective.

Studio Apartment Complete With Fuzzy Yellow Duckling

Nothing shouts springtime quite like the massive influx of baby animals: baby bunnies, chicks, and ducklings are the sweetest accompaniment to sprouting tulips and opening daisies. Usually, these fuzzy little creatures are relegated to the barnyard, but occasionally they are taken out of their realm and invited to spend some time in ours. This is the case of Paco.

My junior year in college, I lived in Barcelona, Spain. For the first six months, I lived with a family in a home stay situation. It was wonderful except for the fact that I couldn't bring home whatever poor soul needed a place to stay. Every day, I would walk up and down La Rambla, the main thoroughfare in Barcelona. At the top of the road are the newspaper vendors. As you descend towards the sea, you become overwhelmed with the scents of fresh cut flowers. And further still, the sounds of animals in tiny cages pierce the ears.

It was at this point in my daily walk that I would always look longingly at the close quarters in which ducklings, guinea pigs, and even chipmunks found themselves huddled around a light bulb for warmth. And I promised myself that as soon as I was out on my own, I would rescue one.

I moved into my own apartment in January, and I carried the tiny yellow duckling, a sure sign of springtime, in a cardboard box on the Metro. I heard him squeal as I climbed the stairs to my solitary apartment, and when I finally opened the box, his tiny bill poked out first. Then his fuzzy head emerged atop the most delicate neck I had ever seen. I lifted him from the box and he buried his head in my chest, closing his eyes, which, believe it or not, were a steely blue-grey.

That first night, Paco fell asleep curled up on my chest, his pale yellow fuzz tickling me as I dreamt.

Raising a duck in a studio apartment in Barcelona is not as easy as it sounds. (Does it sound easy?) After the first week, Paco had begun to follow me around the apartment building, and every Spanish student knew me as "la chica Americana con el patito." (The American girl with the duckling.) I had to wean him from sleeping in my bed, because the concept that I emphasized to myself and everyone else was that Paco "was not a pet. He was an animal waiting to be set free." I lived across the street from El Parque Ciutadella, one of the most beautiful places in Barcelona. There are fountains designed by master architect Antoni Gaudi, which spill water into beautiful ponds. There also, coincidentally, happens to be a thriving population of ducks who depend on human breadcrumbs for survival. It was a perfect home for Paco.

The first time I took him to the park, I was wearing a button-down shirt. He sat contentedly in my arms, watching the ground below my feet pass by. As soon as we approached the duck pond, though, he shoved his tiny head in between two buttons and burrowed in my shirt. I waited, but didn't want to force him. We would take it one day at a time.

After a few weeks, Paco was happy to wander away from me to bask in the sun on the banks of the pond. But he still refused to go in.

He learned to swim in my bathtub. He learned to fly off the edge of my bed. He learned to be a duck in the context of a glorified college dorm room.

There were some disasters, some near break-

A Light Sound in a Stiff Breeze

Many believe that wind chimes promote the mind/ body/ spirit connection. The pretty sounds of wind chimes are said to calm the mind, awaken the spirit, and have a healing effect on the body. Stress and emotional blockages in the body, are believed to be released with vibrations, ultimately mellowing the mind. We then become more connected with our spirits, promoting peace and mobility.

Since prehistoric times, the wind chime has existed in many cultures. East and south Asia is where the significance and popularity of wind chimes grew. Dangling from the eaves of many sacred structures, they were cast, carved, or decorated. Buddhists really rode the wind chime wave, hanging hundreds and even thousands of wind chimes and wind-bells from their places of worship. Dramatic sounds of wind chimes could be heard from Bali to Tibet to Japan. In ancient China, the "chime" was an instrument used to produce music. The Chinese and Japanese started the trend of hanging wind chimes in their homes as a form of decorative art. It is believed that through the teachings of Feng Shui, the western world began hanging wind chimes.

In Feng Shui, tubular wind chimes are said to enhance the Chi of one's home. The number of tubes, material they are made of, and where they are displayed is very important to Feng Shui beliefs. Brass and steel tubes are often loud and cheery, and symbolize the metal element, and are meant for north, northwest, or west corners. Stay safe and avoid bad luck with 6 or 8 tubes; 5 tubes are meant to bring on the worst luck. The wood element is represented by coconut and bamboo wind chimes, which have a very relaxing sound to complement their natural beauty. Placing them in the east or southeast is said to encourage good luck, and hanging one in a southern corner is meant to bring about fame. Metal destroys wood, so hanging a metal wind chime in a southern corner is a Feng Shui no-no.

Wind chimes are truly a calming way to bring beauty to your outdoor space. You can hang them from trees in your garden, or you can dangle them above patio and deck. The soft sounds of wind chimes can help you chill out when lying poolside on a hot summer day. During the winter months, hearing the faint sounds of wind chimes coming from outside your home won't let you forget about the natural beauty that lies outdoors.

There are many varieties of wind chimes to choose from. They can be made of almost anything: stones, seashells, bells, beads, bamboo, paper, plastic, metal, bamboo, coconut, wood, etc. For those desiring to be different, some wind chimes are even made from old bones or mechanics wrenches. You can spend up to hundreds of dollars on some high-end types of wind chimes, or you can make it your mission to make your own.

You can create unique wind chimes with old silverware, with a few spoons and forks. Simply drill holes in spoon handles, with a 1/16-inch drill bit, about 1.8 inches from the end. Forks should be drilled in the middle of the flat area, above the lines, and then needle nose pliers work great to bend the tines in multiple directions. (Don't get discouraged if a few forks break.) The base of the chime can be created from either a spoon or fork, with a hole at each end to run the string through. Safety glasses are a must with this fun task.

Beach glass and seashells are something that many of us have been collecting for years, but have never found a use for. Driftwood makes a perfect base for this kind of wind chime, and will also require a narrow drill bit to create the holes. Colorful pieces of beach glass can be wrapped with thin string and glue to hold them tight. Then, drill holes in the wood, about an inch or two apart, to promote pretty sounds.

Whatever your beliefs are, wind chimes are a fabulous way to subtly enhance your outdoor or indoor living space. Whether it's for sight, sound, or spirit, dangling wind chimes around you can promote goodness and relaxation for your soul.

growing container is at ground level, and back fill with the enriched soil. Water the plant well to help it establish and keep somewhat moist for the first few weeks so the roots develop adequately to sustain the plant. Fertilize with a general-purpose, organic fertilizer once each month.

Agastache is a prolific bloomer and can provide flowers from early summer through fall, especially if more than one variety is planted. Dead-heading spent flowers extends the flowering season and also increases the abundance of blooms.

Some of the varieties with which we've had luck include: Agastache aurantiaca, a three-to-four foot plant with deep orange buds that opens to light orange-red; Agastache reuestris, a long bloomer that produces salmon-pink flowers on a two-to-three foot plant; Agastache cana, with light blue flowers on a three-foot plant; Agastache foeniculum, a very fragrant, anise-scented plant that produces deep blue flowers on a three-foot plant; and Agastache scrophulariifolia, a large plant of up to four feet high with purple flowers.

While Agastache is one of the more carefree garden plants and manages quite well if left alone, during humid summer months, and cool, wet environments, the plant may suffer from bouts of mildew, rust, and other fungal diseases. These are typically minor concerns. To control these problems, if they occur, spray the plants with a general-purpose fungal spray. One used for roses works well.

If you have not experienced Agastache in your garden, this is one plant to keep an eye out for! After one season, you will certainly become a devotee of this plant!

which house multi-carousel DVD and CD player which can be played in any room in the house, and some even use hard drive systems that house all your audio and video needs, just like an iPod, only on a massive scale. Structured wiring, as it is called, is the smartest way to secure your home wiring system. Instead of each outlet being linked to the next in a massive circle, structure wiring systems come directly from the source of the signal. For example, when you splice a cable television line to fifteen outlets on one line, you are weakening the signal at every port.

Using top grade wires is something that generally is overlooked, but can make a serious difference in the quality of your electrical, video and audio systems. Even installing fiber optics is becoming more common, which is a great benefit because fiber optics allows for a variety of uses.

Wiring your house for these things, even if you, as a homeowner, don't ever plan on using them, is a good idea. As times progress, you will see how important it is to have cutting edge, clutter free systems in place. It costs less in the long run to install as much wiring as possible before finishing the house than adding things afterwards. Also having these amenities in place is a great point if you choose to sell your home.

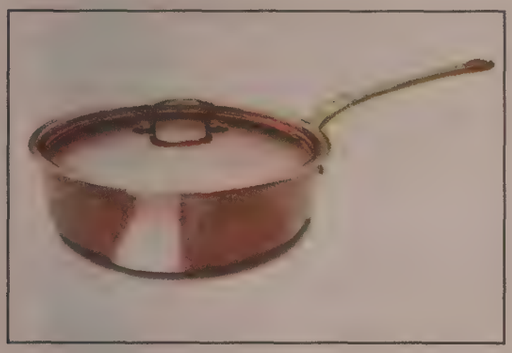
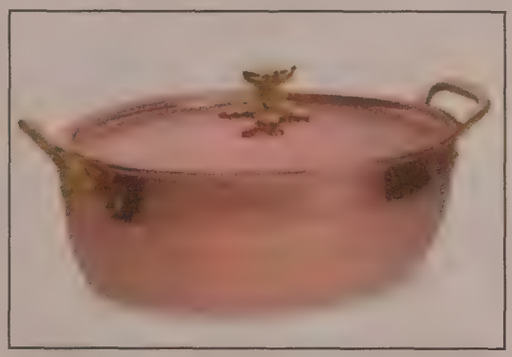
Pretty Pots With A Purpose

Although I haven't eaten chicken or red meat in ten years, I am fascinated by the variety of cookware designed for preparing these staples and for variations on the theme. Oven roasted, seared salmon? Grilled tofu? Vegetable stew? All are made better by using the correct cooking implements. Actually, my investigation into primarily covered cookers answered some questions that have been puzzling me for quite a while, even though I watch a lot of Food TV and read Bon Appetit and receive the Sur La Table catalogue. For ease and accessibility I'm illustrating this article with examples of fabulous cookware available at Williams-Sonoma, in Bridgehampton as well as online, but there are many purveyors of fine cookware, such as Broadway Panhandler in Soho.



Williams-Sonoma carries several lines of well-known and respected European cookware. One of them is Ruffoni, from northern Italy. I think these are really beautiful. They are made from elegant, gleaming copper and their streamlined shapes look modern and traditional at the same time. Each pan is hand-hammered and, therefore, unique in its finish and detail. The interiors are layered non-reactive tin, and the handles are solid brass.



The Oval Roaster and Shallow casserole are perfect, I'm told, for gratins, potato and otherwise, as well as roast meats and poultry, and of course, the ubiquitous casserole. They are intended to move from oven to table, so in spite of the fact that they must be hand-washed, they will save on cleaning because you don't need serving bowls and platters.

One really special item I discovered is a designated Risotto pan. Risotto is superbly versatile. You can put almost any ingredients – meat or seafood or vegetables and fresh herbs –into a risotto, and if you have the patience to give it all the TLC it needs, it can be great. But it's tricky sometimes, and I think this pan will help. The copper conducts heat quickly and evenly, permitting constant simmering over the required low heat, and diameter and depth promise continuous absorption of broth. These may sound like little things, but if you have tried to make risotto under less than optimal conditions, you will really appreciate these qualities. This pan also comes with a lid, so you can use it to cook other things. Don't cover your risotto.

The Copper Braiser creates a perfect environment for succulent stews and other dishes that

After you've decorated your heart out with shells, its time to look to fabrics, furniture and wall adornments. An old dresser, table or chair can be transformed into a seaside work of art with a little creativity. By painting a beach scene on the front or top you can give a worn piece of furniture an entirely new look.

Paintings and photographs of beach scenes, whether tropical or local, can help add that finishing touch to a room. For the bedroom, there is a wide selection of comforters, curtains and pillows that can makeover your space into a tranquil waterside getaway And seashell, fish or lighthouse shower curtains can create that seaside look in your bathroom.

The reason why many people love the water is because it evokes a sense of serenity. Remember, life's good at the beach!

call for slowly braised meats and vegetables. The domed lid helps to circulate moist heat, which is your main requirement in braising, where the objective is falling-off-the-bone juiciness.

From France is the famous Le Creuset cast iron, enameled cookware that is meant to be passed down generation to generation. It comes in a range of colors, blue, red, saffron and others, some of which are exclusive to Williams-Sonoma. Le Creuset makes an oval Dutch oven, which is also for roasts and poultry, but touts different advantages than the copper Ruffoni. The cast iron retains heat and the pan is dishwasher safe.

There is also a Deep Covered Skillet, which moves from stovetop to oven. I don't think I have any pans that do this, though quite a few recipes I want to try require this technique. I suppose it's not so mysterious, unless you don't have the proper pan. With this skillet, you can sear your food over high heat on the cooktop to create a crisp and browned top (or bottom), and then add liquid and finish it in the oven. Or, you can stay on the stove, on low heat. The pan requires very little fat to prevent sticking and can withstand all these different sources of high heat. This is definitely the one I want.

Another fantastic addition to the well-stocked kitchen is the Le Creuset 10" grill pan. This is a heavyweight pan with deep-set ridges that keep the food item away from the pan drippings, promoting low fat dining. The pan won't rust or absorb flavors, and gets very hot to create professional-looking grill marks.

If you would prefer to buy in one fell swoop and not wade through the multitude of options, Le Creuset offers sets of cookware, from the 6-piece basic set to the more advanced 9-piece set. The 9-piece includes: covered round Dutch oven, square grill pan, baker, covered braiser, fry pan and covered oval Dutch oven. Check out for more colors and styles.

I Want The Top!

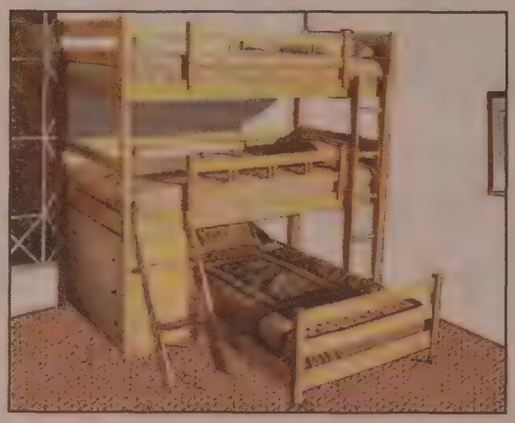
Bunk beds are an integral part of any summer home. After all, you don't think you got this place as a romantic respite from the real world, do you? You have a house in the Hamptons, and if it's year-round or summer, you are inevitably going to experience the descent of the extended family in the summer.

My parents bought their summer house for themselves, sure, but my mom always had her eye on the future. She still dreams of the day when she will be able to woo the kids and grandkids out with promises of long, lazy days at the beach. The days of grandchildren still only exist in her dreams, but the house is doing the trick so far, as my siblings and I return to the arms of my parents every time the sun warms the sandy beaches. In fact, it might be working a little too well for my parents' liking.

During one of my mother's wistful rants about all her children and grandchildren crowding under one roof, I had to implore her: "Where are we all going to fit?" My sister and her husband already take up the foldout couch. So while it would be lovely to house a bunch of rugrats, there just isn't room. My mother smiled, always thinking ahead.

"Bunk beds," she said.

She plans to paint the basement a nice, bright color and then fill it with bunk beds, as many as she needs for the hoards of grandchildren who promise to fill her future. It is a great way to fit everyone, but more than that, it is the perfect forum for cousin-to-cousin bonding. When the parents head to bed, the kids get to play pranks on each other and tell ghost stories into the wee small hours of morning.



There are lots of options in bunk beds. This is not the same old two-twin-beds-stacked-on-top-of-each-other any more. When I was little, I got attached to the idea of bunk beds, but my older sister wanted no part it in. My parents had to improvise. We found a bunk bed that was only the top bunk, and below the bed we placed my dressers. Nowadays, there are newer, higher quality variations on the same theme. At Bedroom Furniture Direct (www.bedroom-furniture-direct.com), there is a gorgeous all-in-one twin bunk bed with drawers and a desk tucked in below the top bunk.

When my parents first moved out to East Hampton, they knew that the guests would be arriving in droves. So, they put my sister and me in one room with a bunk bed that was a double bed on the bottom and a single on top (guess who was elevated and elated). My brother was in the other room with the same kind of bunk bed. This meant that when guests came over, my brother moved to the top bunk in our room and my sister and I shared the bottom, leaving the other room for a couple and a child, or some other combination of three. A metal version of this double bunk bed is quite affordable. You can find it at Bedroom Furniture Direct for only $422, with free shipping!

Standard bunk beds are fabulous for piling everybody into the basement, like my mom dreams of doing. You can cram three beds into an average sized room, fitting six grandchildren. They just better arrange themselves so that the kids who Overseas moves aren't foreign to us.

At Despatch Moving & Storage, we're as experienced at moving you across the Atlantic or across the Island. (In fact, we recently won a Customer Quality Achievement Award from Atlas Van Lines.)

We know the language. The tariffs. The legalities. The subtle nuances of overseas moves. We have to. Because not only do we move complete households, we move decorators, interior designers and international art collectors. You'll find that we're as sensitive to your possessions as we are to your specific needs.

If you're considering an overseas move, consider Despatch. In fact, the thought of using someone else is foreign to us.

Au revoir.

downs, where I would run into my good friend's room down the hall with a duck at my heels, and I'd shout, "I'm getting rid of him! That's it! He pooped on my bed!! Why, oh why do I have a duck??!?" She was remarkable, really, as she patted my shoulder and told me she'd take care of him for the night. But whenever she offered that, I realized I didn't want to let him go.

Two months of life as a human, and Paco's feathers were darkening. He was no longer that spring chicken (or duck) that I had cradled in my arms. In March, my old friend Matt came to visit me. When he saw Paco, nearly mature, jumping out of his cardboard box to sit on my bed as I read, he put his hand on my shoulder.

"Emily," he said softly. "It's time to let him go."

I knew it was time. A duck doesn't belong in an apartment. I shouldn't be standing in a room flapping my arms as if they were wings in a desperate attempt to teach him to be the duck that I was not. I had to let him go.

The next day, I brought Paco across the street in my arms. I set him directly in the water, so he had no choice but to paddle. He looked at me and swished his webbed feet around. He swam in circles.

I stared. I stared and stared. He looked so grown up in that big rippling pond. He was in his own element.

I felt a familiar hand on my shoulder.

"Emily, we've been standing here watching him for an hour. Let's really let him go."

We turned and walked back to the realm of humans, to my studio apartment of tile and cement. It was no place for a duck to grow up. But whenever I'd visit my little Paco across the street, I would take comfort in the fact that he got to grow up at all.

have to go to the bathroom in the middle of the night are on the bottom bunk.

Another great website with a plethora of options for bunk beds is www.furniture2buy.com. At both of the websites listed, there is a standard pricing system. Metal bunk beds are always the cheapest, for those who are looking for the most grandchildren at one time. For a higher-end bunk bed, look for pine, maple or oak. They are so sturdy they'll last forever, but the prices go as high as $1100.

So, if you're looking for a way to store all your family members, present and future, you may consider investing in some bunk beds. It's the most cost and space-efficient way to keep them coming back home for years to come.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Tasty blackfish, also known as tautog, or simply tog to New Englanders, is found from Nova Scotia to the Carolinas, but is most common from Cape Cod to Delaware Bay. While you may not be drawn to blackfish aesthetically, with its generally dull gray color and darker blotches on its sides, the fish yields very firm white meat and is deliciously suitable for different styles of cooking.

For a truly scrumptious dish, sauté thick blackfish fillets, then dress with leek, ginger and balsamic vinegar sauce made from the drippings in the pan. For one of the simplest fish recipes and little or no cleanup bake blackfish fillets in a foil wrapper with a mixture of savory herbs. The firm flesh of blackfish lends itself beautifully to grilling. Marinate the fish in an Italian style herb dressing then place in a hinged grill, or foil wrapper with holes in it, to grill over hot coals.

Blackfish roughly comes into season in May when lilacs bloom and the water temperatures are just right for the rod and reelers. Just remember, the freshest fish is at our fingertips.

BLACKFISH WITH LEEK, GINGER AND BALSAMIC VINEGAR

Serve forth this delectable dish to acclaim!

Serves 4

2 thick fillets of blackfish, about 3/4 pounds each
Flour, salt, pepper and paprika
3 tablespoons canola oil
2 leek, trimmed, washed well and thinly sliced
2 tablespoons freshly grated ginger
2 tablespoons Vermouth
1 1/2 tablespoons balsamic vinegar
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons chopped parsley or chives

1. Cut center bone from each fillet, rinse and pat dry with paper towel. Sprinkle with flour, salt, pepper and paprika to lightly coat.

2. Heat 2 tablespoons oil in a large non-stick skillet and when hot but not smoking, put in the fillets. You will have to do this in two batches; brown lightly about 3 minutes on each side.

Preheat oven to 400 degrees.

3. Heat remaining tablespoon oil in a clean skillet and sauté the leek over medium-low heat for 6-8 minutes and add the ginger. Sauté for 2-3 minutes longer and pour in the vermouth. Bring to a boil, add the vinegar, salt and pepper to taste and stir to mix. Keep warm.

4. Meanwhile put the fish in the preheated oven and roast for 4-5 minutes. Remove fish from oven when done and coat with sauce. Garnish with parsley or chives.

FISH IN A BAG WITH HERBS, ITALIAN STYLE

The firm flesh of striped bass or blackfish lends itself to steaming with savory juices and fresh herbs in a foil envelope.

Serves 4

1 1/2 pounds blackfish fillets or striped bass, skin removed
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
2 cloves garlic, finely minced
1 teaspoon fennel seeds, crushed
1/3 cup chopped mixed fresh herbs, such as parsley, basil, rosemary, sage
Juice of 1 lemon
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Heavy duty aluminum foil

Preheat oven to 425 degrees

1.Have fishmonger remove the line of bones in the skinless fillets. Rinse fish and pat dry with paper towels.

2.Tear a piece of aluminum foil triple the size of the fish and fold in half. Place the fish in the center of the foil. Season with salt and pepper and sprinkle over the chopped garlic and crushed fennel seeds. Distribute the herbs evenly over the fish and squeeze the juice of lemon over all. Pour over the olive oil.

3. Pull the edges over the fish in three places, two sides and top, then fold edges over tightly. Transfer to a baking sheet and bake about 12-15 minutes. Let rest in the foil for a few minutes before serving. Serve with boiled potatoes if desired.

BLACKFISH ON THE GRILL, ITALIAN STYLE

Lacking a hinged, double-sided grill to cook your fish, tear a piece of heavy-duty foil, large enough to protect your fish on the grill and punch some holes into it. Be sure to brush with oil before placing the fish on it.

Serves 6-8

3-3 1/2 pound blackfish, head and tail on, cleaned, gills and scales removed
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
2 teaspoons fresh rosemary
1 bay leaf, crushed
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

Herb marinade

2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
3 tablespoons finely chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley
2 teaspoons fresh oregano leaves or 1/2 teaspoon dried
1 teaspoon dried fennel
3-4 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
1 tablespoon Anisette
1/3 cup extra virgin olive oil

1. Fill a pan with acidulated water (one tablespoon lemon juice to 1 quart water) and rinse fish in that. Dry very well in several layers of paper toweling. Lightly salt and pepper inside of fish. Add rosemary and bay leaf to oil and brush mixture all over inside of fish.

2. Prepare Herb dressing: Combine garlic and parsley, add oregano, fennel, lemon juice and anisette, and stir to mix. Whisk in olive oil until thoroughly blended.

3. With a sharp slicing knife make 2-3 incisions, at a 90-degree angle on each side of the fish. Coat fish liberally with the herb mixture, then lightly salt and pepper both sides. Let marinate for 20-30 minutes, no longer.

4. Meanwhile, oil a grill cage or foil as suggested above and lay the fish on its side. Mound a deep bed of coals in your grill and burn them down until they are a gray ash. Place fish about 3-4 inches from source of heat and cook about 10 minutes on each side, turning every 5 minutes or so. Baste fish with marinade as it is turned. Fish is done when an ordinary matchstick, inserted into the flesh, moves easily down to the bone (if the match bends the fish is not cooked through), and the skin is crisp. Be careful not to overcook. Serve on a bed of curly parsley with lemon wedges.

Dining in the Hamptons

Surfside Inn

Old Montauk Highway
Montauk, NY
631-668-5958

On Old Montauk Highway heading east, parallel to the ocean, sits a gem, also known as Surfside Inn. From the moment my friend Tom and I arrived, we felt like we were at home. Helene and Mario, who co-manage the restaurant, warmly greeted us and led us to our table in the main dining room.

The restaurant was filled with patrons enjoying a family dinner together for Mother's Day. The décor flaunts a bright, rustic style with oak floors, wood beams and a stone wall with a fireplace that was built out of rocks from a local beach. The building dates back to the 1920s and is considered one of the most historic places in Montauk. Back in the day, Surfside was a boarding house, a country western spot and some say even a brothel. I'm picturing it must have been something like the series on HBO, Deadwood, or similar to some other great nostalgic western series or movie.

While we got comfortable in our seats, our waiter Jonathan delivered a glass of Rex-Goliath Pinot Noir and a non-alcoholic drink (he was driving) for my friend. Helene has compiled a wine list that offers both local and imported wines as well as additional selections when she discovers a new, great tasting vintage.

Warm crisp rolls appeared before us and we both indulged in the anti low carb favorite. Jonathan explained the menu and told us about a few nightly specials. Everything sounded amazing and we struggled to make that final decision.

We started with the special appetizer of the evening, a Salmon Cod Cake. This lightly pan fried cake was moist and flavorful and was accompanied by a chutney dipping sauce that added an extra zing. A half order of succulent Baby Back Ribs (also available as a meal) tempted us even more. I love ribs and have tried many in my time. These zesty-tangy ribs were heavenly. The meat fell off the bone and I had no problem eating a bigger portion than Tom. And if that wasn't enough food before our main entrée, we couldn't pass up the opportunity to try Surfside's Homemade Artichoke, Spinach & Brie dip served with flat breads. The dip was the perfect blend of Brie cheese mixed with artichoke and spinach (a great appetizer to share with several people).

A few other classics at Surfside include: Little Necks, steamed or on the half shell, and Baked Clams. We knew there would be a much-needed intermission before our next course, and so did Jonathan, so we chatted it up some more and tried to digest while we took in the beautiful water views of the Atlantic Ocean.

For my main entrée, I chose the Lobster Ravioli (also available as an appetizer). I have since decided to stay away from carbs for at least a week. Six giant size lobster-filled raviolis occupied my plate and sat on top of a homemade marinara, and also a creamy sweet tomato and vodka sauce. I shared a few and somehow had no problem finishing the remainder. As for Tom, he ordered the Fresh Loin of Pork served with red cabbage, applesauce, potato, and vegetable with pan gravy, which was also delightful.

Chef Kevin Braune is continually changing the menu according to what fish is in season. I'll never forget dining at Surfside several years ago and eating the freshest flounder I had ever tasted. Unfortunately, flounder wasn't on the menu the other night, but I'll be back to check again. Surfside is also known for their fresh lobsters. Montauk is the place to dine when you're in search of the freshest seafood.

One would assume that after an extravagant meal like we had just finished, we would have no room for dessert. Never say never. And as Felix Unger said in one of my favorite episodes of The Odd Couple, "Never assume because..." you know the rest.

We completed our stay at Surfside with a little taste of every sweet, decadent dessert they had to offer. From the Cheese Cake Panels to the Carrot Cake, Rice Pudding and Chocolate Cake, they were all equally sensational.

Owner Thomas Milne and his staff are like family, and they treat customers in the same way. Next time you are looking for a relaxing place to dine with your family and friends or significant other, visit Surfside Inn; you'll be as delighted as we were.

–Kelly Krieger

Dining in the Hamptons

Eating Alone with Friends

Although I love to prepare extravagant gourmet meals for friends, I truly dislike cooking just for myself. So, I eat out as often as my wallet will allow. I cannot always find someone to eat with me, however, particularly during the off-season. Also, when I first moved to the Hamptons full-time from the City, I didn't even know that many people to eat with. But solo diners should never fear: when alone, it is quite enjoyable to eat at the bar of your favorite restaurant.

I never liked sitting alone at a table in a restaurant. No matter how many books, magazines and file folders I bring with me, so as to announce (quite falsely) "I am eating alone on purpose," I still feel sort of pathetic, imagining that everyone is quietly tut-tutting about my lack of a date. When I sit alone at the bar, though, I have instant friends – the bartender and other bar patrons. It is always fun to meet new people and to catch up with other regulars. And even if I happen to be the only customer at the bar, I know that the only thing people are quietly muttering about is to comment upon how stylish I look.

Most restaurants with decent bars will let you order anything from the regular menu, including nightly specials, and some restaurants have an additional bar menu usually containing more typical bar fare. Cloth place mats and napkins are provided, as is a bread basket. Nothing from the more typical restaurant experience is missed, other than not having someone sit across from you and placing your food order with the bartender rather than a waiter.

I actually first got turned on to eating at a bar while still living in the City, when friends and I had a last-minute hankering to eat at the Union Square Café. That restaurant, perhaps the City's most popular, is always booked long in advance, so impromptu diners must vie for a seat at the bar and eat there. And although I usually eat at restaurant bars in the Hamptons only when I am alone, lack of space on crowded Saturday nights often brings me and friends to restaurant bars.

Take last Saturday, for instance. After getting out of an evening movie in East Hampton, Robin

(of this paper) and I knew that we could never get a table at any restaurant on such a rainy night without reservations. So we went into Rowdy Hall, the not-fancy but equally tasty sibling of Nick and Toni's, sat at the bar and had a great dinner. I have also eaten at Nick & Toni's bar during the summer, which is fantastic for people-watching.

In Sag Harbor, where I spend much more time than in East Hampton, I usually pick The New Paradise Cafe, both for its excellent food and the talents of Howie, who is hands down one of the best bartenders in New York. The bar at Magnolia is also a nice place to eat, and the JLX bar allows for people-watching akin to that at Nick & Toni's, not to mention oysters.

Bridgehampton is also one of my towns. Being a serious meat lover, I enjoy eating at Bobby Van's spacious, traditional bar, particularly because their burgers are as good as any I have tasted anywhere, and their thinly sliced potato chips at the bar are probably more addictive than nicotine. When I am in the mood for bistro fare or comfort food, I always enjoy eating at Almond. The huge macaroni-and-cheese dish is sinful. Although I have not eaten at the bar at Alison, my mouth has watered as I have watched others eat there.

In Southampton, I sometimes eat at the bar at red bar brasserie. Although the small space can be quite crowded if you try to eat at 8:00 on a Saturday, the food is always worthwhile. And I plan to become a regular at the bar of the new restaurant James on Main, which I am so happy has replaced 75 Main.

So, whether you are alone or with friends, eating at a bar means having the same good food you would expect and also scintillating conversation with new and interesting people – particularly if you are lucky enough to sit next to me!

HEALTH, BEAUTY & FITNESS

Rejuvenations by Christina Poulos

The long awaited warm weather has arrived, and many of us will be venturing out of our Hamptons homes to spend more time in the great outdoors. Rays of sunshine and clean air aren't the only things that we'll be exposing our bodies to this summer. It is no secret that the Hamptons are heavily populated with deer, which often drop ticks as they travel across our beautifully manicured lawns and nearby wooded areas.

From now until August, ticks are the most active. They can be less than one-tenth of an inch in size, and when engorged with blood they can actually grow to three times their size. The life span of a tick is 2 years, and they only eat 3 times during their life. Ticks live in the woods, weeds, and tall grasses at the beach, and they pick up bacteria when they feed on infected mice. Many people do not even know when they are bitten, because ticks are so small, and inject a numbing agent into the skin, so you can't feel them. Not only are we at high risk for Lyme Disease, but 2 other diseases; Babesiosis, and Ehrlichia, are serious infections that are becoming more and more common on the East End.

Lyme disease is transmitted through deer ticks, and is the second fastest growing disease in the United States. It is grossly underreported because it is difficult to diagnose, and tests are extremely unreliable. Symptoms include fevers, sweats, chills, weight loss or gain, hair loss, swollen glands, sore throat, neck pain, headaches, vertigo, upset stomach, chest pain, shortness of breath, mood swings, blurry vision/ hearing, confusion, and disorientation. 75% of people with Lyme disease will also see a visible rash on their skin. Lyme disease not only causes arthritic problems, but can also lead to serious neurological and cardiac complications.

Babesia is another tick-borne illness that people should be aware of here on the East End. It is cause by protozoa, which invade and kill red blood cells. Humans often contract the disease due to being in close proximity to white-tailed deer and field mice. Similar to malaria, capillary blockage could possibly occur, which would affect the central nervous system and liver. Symptoms of babesia include profuse sweating, headache, fatigue, fever, muscle aches and pains, chills, dizziness, weakness, and heart palpitations. Some people may experience jaundice, and when left untreated, the infection could even be fatal.

Ehrlichia is caused by a bacteria parasite that invades and infects the white blood cells. Symptoms of this infection include headache, chills, fever, sweating, severe muscle aches and pains, nausea, vomiting, cough, and diarrhea.

"Lyme disease is big on the East End – if you are getting tested for Lyme disease, there is no reason why you shouldn't get tested for babesia and ehrlichia as well," said certified pediatric nurse practitioner/ mother/ dog owner Liz Ernst-Cramer, of East Hampton Pediatrics. Liz could not stress enough how important it is to check your children and yourself for ticks before going to bed every night. She informed us that keeping your grass cut short, and not leaving piles of leaves and debris around (to minimize the rodent population), are examples of proactive steps that you can take. She also added that Frontline is the only thing that is effective for dogs, which you can get by visiting your local veterinarian. "There are pockets of ehrlichia from Hampton Bays to Montauk," Liz informed us.

Twin Forks Land Service (631-726-0108) has also recognized the need for tick control on the East End. They are offering 20% off all tick and mosquito contracts signed before May 31st.

If you find a tick on you, remove it immediately with a pair of fine tweezers. Try to get as close to the skin as possible, grasp the tick, and carefully pull it out. If you are unable to do this, or if part of the tick remains, see your doctor immediately. The longer the tick is attached to you, the greater the risk for infection. If you can successfully remove the tick, wipe the area with rubbing alcohol, and call your doctor. He may even want you to save the tick in a jar, for identification.

When outdoors this summer, wear light colored clothing, tucked in, as often as possible, and consider installing fencing to guard your property against the ever-growing population of deer. Prevention and education are the most important steps in safeguarding your family (including your pets) against Lyme disease, babesia, ehrlichia, and other diseases that are becoming more apparent on the East End.

Pilates Perfect

"Fitness is the first requisite to happiness"–Joseph Pilates (1880-1967)

I cruised around the winding turns and over the hills of Montauk last Saturday, carrying with me the stress and anxiety from the ultra long week before. Little did I know, all of my pent up stress and worries would soon be released at Art of Fitness, a fully equipped Pilates studio, inside a beautiful home on a hill, overlooking magnificent Montauk.

I made the left just after the gazebo in the center of town, which was the ultimate landmark to tell me Art of Fitness was nearby. I pulled up the long driveway, and was greeted by Pilates instructor Giselle Mahoney. Giselle gave me the tour of her spacious studio, and I noticed immediately that it was tastefully decorated with both fashion and art. Curiosity got the best of me, as Giselle went on to reveal her extensive background in art and dance, which initially sparked her interest in Pilates.

I was an avid Pilates DVD participant, but had never done Pilates on the actual machines that were originally created for the graceful movements. I wondered how different this experience could be, as I slipped my sneakers off and began my 60-minute training session.

Giselle walked me past each piece of equipment, and I have to admit, the machines looked complex and a little intimidating. First, we went over the importance of keeping the spine in neutral alignment, to work the deepest muscles of the core safely and effectively, and also to prevent and ward off back pain. Giselle informed me that your back should not be pressed down as flat as can be on the mat or machine beneath the body. She told me to focus on pushing my sacrum (tailbone) down, so that a natural curve in the spine would allow a small space – just enough to slip a hand between my back and the surface beneath me. She also explained the importance of the breath: exhaling during the lifting (challenging) part of each movement.

The first piece of equipment I would train on was called the Reformer. It consisted of a sliding platform anchored at one end of the frame with springs. After I lay down on the mobile platform, Giselle guided me through a series of exercises, by either pulling on ropes, or pushing off from the stationery bar at my feet. These exercises involved the challenge of balancing while either sitting up or lying flat on the moving platform. I was guided through exercises that especially worked my arms, legs, and obliques in ways I had never trained before.

I then hopped onto the padded platform of the Cadillac, one of the most effective and versatile pieces of Pilates equipment. Over 80 different exercises can be performed on this cage-like machine, from gentle spring-assisted sit-ups to advanced acrobatics from the upper bars. Giselle showed me how to do exercises that incorporated bars and straps, which were secured to the frame with sturdy springs. I immediately found that the Cadillac, without a doubt, challenged and isolated my core abdominal muscles, while stretching my entire body.

The smallest piece of equipment in the studio is the Wunda chair, designed to strengthen and stretch the muscle groups, which are not easy to target. The exercises on this simple machine involve balance and control, with a bench-like platform with a bar attached to springs. Movement on the Wunda chair can be done while either sitting or standing on it, or lying or standing on the floor.

A one-on-one session, with the support of a trainer, is important in helping you understand the technique, and at the same time allowing your mind to focus and learn the new equipment. Every exercise in Pilates is done only 3-5 times, so making the most of every movement is imperative. One of the best things about Pilates is feeling immediate results, and seeing actual results in as little as a few weeks. Pilates can challenge and condition the strongest of athletes, from avid runners, to gym lovers, to golf enthusiasts.

Giselle Mahoney has been teaching Pilates in Montauk for the past 5 years. She remains active and involved in the continuous evolution of Pilates by attending workshops in Manhattan. She has seen people grow to love Pilates, who started off hating any forms of exercise – even walking!

I felt totally revived and refreshed as I headed home through the hills of Montauk. For the ultimate mind/body boost, contact Giselle Mahoney at Art of Fitness, at 631-668-3519, to schedule your one-on-one training session.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

B & Bs have popped up all over both Forks in the last few years. Seeing that most of these properties were once old East End manor homes, family estates or old captain's homes it is usually more than likely that they are filled with East End history. Some of these newly renovated inns date back as far as the 1600s. Buyers of properties such as these look at them not only an investment or business venture but a labor of love. Proprietors of these quaint establishments work hard to blend the old with new by keeping the homes' character and detail intact and yet adding all the modern conveniences as well as the latest technology. Many of these homes turned inns are painstakingly brought back, to the very last detail.

That is exactly what realtor Antenello Bartello and her husband Robert J. Rosen have done in the Village of East Hampton. They just recently re-opened The Baker House 1650 in one of the town's oldest homes and have transformed it into what they intend to be one of the East End's most exclusive B & Bs and spas. It is known as the J. Harper Poor Cottage circa 1648, and was purchased by the couple in December 2004. They have spent the winter renovating and updating the old hotel. Its new amenities include a full service spa, infinity edged pool, formal gardens, flat screen TVs with DVDs in all guest rooms and an extensive DVD library. There are Bose stereos, Bartech mini bars and wireless Internet access. Many of the rooms have wood burning fireplaces. The inn is named for the second owner Thomas Baker, who called it Bakers Tavern. This exceptional landmark property is opposite the village green and town pond and is as much as a fixture to the area as they are. In 1911 Joseph Greenleaf Thorp renovated the home in the Arts and Crafts style, which the new owners have maintained throughout. "With this B & B, we are already starting with a spectacular property and a very high level of service," says Ms. Bartello, who fell in love with the property at first sight last fall.

The Historic Baker House

On the North Fork: quintessential in East Marion was once the home of Captain Leek, a local ship's captain who built the 15-room Victorian in 1840. The inn is filled with fine antiques, has a modern day spa and as well as a charming widow's walk. Most original detail of this historic home has been preserved or replicated. It is listed with The Long Island Society for the Preservation of Antiquities. In nearby Greenport, you'll find the Bartlett House, another B&B. This one was the home of NY State Assemblyman John Bartlett and was built at the turn of the century. The 10-room Victorian was built with Corinthian columns, stained glass windows, fireplaces and Dutch Colonial doors. The home remained a family residence for 60 years and then became a Catholic Convent. In 1982 the home was bought and restored as a Bed and Breakfast Inn and has retained its charm and historic character. From Greenport you can easily access Shelter Island by a short ferry ride and then another into the Hamptons via North Haven.

In North Haven, another historical old mansion is making news once again. The Maycroft Estate that was sold just months ago to a private owner who has been working on restoring it, has filed permits to move the great lady. Not to another location, but to simply rotate it to ensure a better water view. The grand scale $20 million, 44-acre waterfront estate that was once in danger of being spliced 20 ways, was saved when the new owners decided to keep it a single-family, private residence and restore it to what it once was. Other old historic estates and mansions such as Bayberryland on the Peconic Bay in Southampton or Captain Jeremiah Ludlow's home on Ocean Road in Bridgehampton were not as fortunate when they both met with the wrecking ball last year. Making these old homes into inns or town municipal buildings seems to be a viable alternative to wiping out their history forever. The town of Southampton at present still holds hope for purchasing the Villa Maria in Water Mill. The Villa Maria is a 15-acre historic estate and landmark convent on Mill Creek that went on the market for $25 million a few weeks ago. All offers on the property remain in negotiation.

NY- Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find.

A LITTLE SWEETER IN BRIDGEHAMPTON
Dear Dan,

The other day, I was going through some old pastry recipes that my father left me. Some were from his father and grandfather back in Alsace. What handwriting they had! They were using goose feather at that time. No wonder……Among them I found a document stating that I'm the fifth generation of pastry chefs in my family.

It started at a time when oranges where a treat that could be shared only on Christmas. My mother told me that I should think about the 6th generation! I know, I know…..

So here is the good news. "La Patisserie" project is moving along very well. It will be within the restaurant, on your left when you enter. What you will find there is not part of the USDA pyramid scary colors thing.

Who cares about that pyramid anyway, when it is about enjoying pastries!

Showcases are coming from Italy, the pastry chef from France, the strawberries from California, the butter from Vermont, the eggs from around the corner, the cooking equipment from the Bowery and our customers from all around the world……

I'm working on the last details on the menu, and I hope that by Memorial Day, "La Patisserie" will be ready! Yes, yes, we will have an opening party!

Note that starting June, Pierre's will be opened seven days.

And if you want to know more about Pierre's, please visit our website

See you soon!

NOT SO FUNNY
Dear Dan,

As a parent of a Southampton College student who is graduating this year, I am hoping you will report on the students' dismay that their desire to have a comedian speak at their graduation has been ignored and Tim Bishop's offer to be commencement speaker has been accepted. Does commencement have to be turned into another political statement? You've been doing a good job reporting on the disheartened faculty and staff, how about talking with some students about this?

Police Blotter

Short Shrift At Thrift. According to Southampton Police reports, several items from the Southampton Hospital Thrift Shop, located on Main Street in the Village, were stolen. Apparently, a little window-shopping led to a little pocket filling as a woman was spied loading up with several items, which she neglected to pay for. Subsequently, she was arrested by Village Police and charged with petit larceny.

Hopping Mad! It appears a pup's hankering for rare-bit got him snared. The owner of a home on Old Barn Lane, in Sagaponack, watched as a white furry four-legged beast nabbed a hare from his rabbit hutch. The dog, on to a tasty tidbit, returned for a second helping, which is when the trouble started…at least, for the dog. The owner subdued the mutt by placing a rope around his neck and then called Animal Control. Unfortunately, no one has claimed the dog, nor has its owner been determined.

Seeks Fortune In Underwear? A mystery person with a penchant for panties entered a Hillside Road home, in Southampton, one weekend evening while the resident was at church. In addition to several items of lingerie, the panty bandit also netted about $80 in cash.

Lights Out! A house under construction on Little Noyac Path, in Watermill, was robbed of six electrical lights valued at $1,800, according to reports filed by Southampton Town Police. Hired by LPA Architects, in Sayville, the general contractor on the job reported the robbery to police.

…That Funny Smell Can't Be Gas… On Cobb Hill Lane, in Water Mill, a resident reported that his Vermont Castings grill had vanished. Apparently the disappearance took place sometime during the later part of April. The homeowner provided authorities with a list of individuals who had access to his home during the period in question.

Knows Who Did It? You might have to rethink a few things when some of your belongings go missing and you believe you know who is responsible. Such appears to be the situation concerning 20 DVDs, a Tiffany necklace and bracelet, which disappeared from a Cedar Drive home, in East Hampton. The owner of the missing property told authorities she possibly knows the person who stole the items.

Feeling A Bit Punchy? Not pleased by a punch to the face, a Hampton Court resident told police he wanted the incident on record. Apparently minding his own business while he was sitting in his car, which was parked on the Sag Harbor-Bridgehampton Turnpike, he was supposedly hit by an acquaintance because he was ignoring him.

Here One Minute. Gone The Next. A bright yellow Univega bike was reported stolen from the front of BookHampton located on Main Street, in East Hampton Village. It appears the owner of the $1,000 bicycle had unlocked it and then went into the store to get his backpack. When he returned the bike was gone.

Not Necessarily Neighborly. An East Lake resident in Montauk might have caught, on videotape surveillance that is, the perpetrator who sneaked on his property, rock in hand and smashed a window on his Jeep. The homeowner identified the vandal to police who are investigating the incident.

Going Topless, A Crime? How's this for view improvement? The hedges of a home on Old Montauk Highway were clipped sometime between now and November when the owner was last on the property. The homeowner believes that his neighbors have a much better ocean view…now that his trees are topless.

Pass Me the Knife, I Mean the Remote. An argument arose after one Montauk housemate irked another with his excessive channel surfing. In a final display of anger he pulled the plug on the set. That's when his housemate pulled a knife, hitting him in the chest with the handle and leaving slash marks on his throat. He refused medical treatment and the slashing lass was charged with second a degree assault.

STOP FOR TURTLES From late spring through the fall, our indigenous turtles roam their now fragmented environment. As they wander out onto the roadways, they are often struck by speeding and unexpecting motorists. These precious turtles are slow moving and can be easily avoided. When frightened, they withdraw into their shells and resemble an ellipitical stone in the road. Please drive with care and help a turtle cross the road.
